The following appeared last night as a supplement to the London Gazette:—"War Office, Pall Mall, May 29, 1880.—Brevet.—Lieutenant-Colonel H.R.H. Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., Rifle Brigade, to be Colonel (dated May 29, 1880). Brevet Colonel H.R.H. Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G, from Lieutenant-Colonel, Rifle Brigade, to be Major-General (dated May 29, 1880). Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of the following appointments: — Field-Marshal H.R.H. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall, K.G., K.T., G.C.B., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., Colonel of the 10th Hussars, from Colonel-in-Chief of the Rifle Brigade, to be Colonel-in-Chief of the following regiments:—1st Life Guards, 2nd Life Guards, Royal Horse Guards (dated May 29, 1880). Major-General H.R.H. Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., to be Colonel-in-Chief of the Rifle Brigade, vice Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, transferred to the Colonelcy-in-Chief of the Regiments of Cavalry of the Household Brigade (dated May 29, 1880).

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will hold a Levée at 1 o'clock on Tuesday next, at the Horse Guards, Whitehall, the number being limited to 150. Applications to attend should be addressed to the Military Secretary.

The post of Deputy-Surveyor-General of the Straits Settlements has been offered to, and accepted by, Lieutenant H. E. McCallum, Royal Engineers, who is at present attached to the office of Inspector of Works, Woolwich Arsenal. This officer has had considerable experience of the colony to which he goes, having previously served there as private secretary to Governor Major-General Sir William Jervois, R.E., and subsequently as Superintending Engineer of the new forts at Singapore, constructed from his own designs.

General J. C. Hope Gibsone, Colonel of the 17th Lancers, completed on the 21st inst. the age—70 years —when retirement is rendered compulsory. General H. Darby Griffith, C.B., became 70 on Saturday last; and Lieutenant-General T. S. Conway, C.B., attains that age on the 7th prox. Exactly three months will then elapse before another vacancy occurs on the Establishment by the operations of the age clause, the next officer for retirement being General Sir A. Little, K.C.B., who will be 70 on September 7.

Colonel G. A. Wilkinson, A Brigade R.H.A., having retired from the Service, his vacancy in India should be filled by Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. Williams, of the same brigade, who has had twenty years or more of uninterrupted home service. By a recent regimental order, issued in December last, there cannot be a shadow of a doubt that he is the man to go. We believe, however, that "other arrangements" are to be made, and that a much less favoured individual is to be ordered to embark.

Sir Garnet Wolseley has well earned the unostentatious, but not the less hearty, welcome which he has received on his return to England. He has only been absent a year, but during that time he has accomplished an extraordinary amount of work, crowned with considerable success. He arrived in South Africa too late to do more than reap the fruits of Lord Chelmsford's operations, but we doubt whether there are many Generals who would have turned his predecessor's success to such good and speedy profit. The Zulus were defeated in the heart of their country by Lord Chelmsford, but it was owing to Sir Garnet's admirable arrangements that the action of Ulundi practically marked the end of the war, and that Zululand was so speedily pacified, tranquillised, and organised. So soon, moreover, as that task was accomplished, with the ease of a master in the art of organisation, than he turned with what, considering the distances covered and the difficulties intervening, may be considered lightning speed on Sekukuni, and at one blow annihilated that formidable chief's power. That done, he convinced the Boers of the Transvaal that any struggle against his vigorous grip was useless, and soon reduced the province to a state of tranquillity, if not of universal contentment. A man who is so rapid, thorough, and sound as Sir Garnet can be ill spared from the great centres of interest, work, and usefulness. It is a satisfaction, therefore, to find him available for the next tough job which we may have in hand. Some carping spirits say that Sir Garnet is merely a lucky man, but it must be no ordinary capacity which invariably attains success. Rumour has it that he will shortly proceed to India as Commander-in-Chief, and every one will allow that no better appointment can be had. The Indian Army sadly needs the presence of an able organiser, and it is as an organiser that Sir Garnet chiefly shines.

The appointment of Lieutenant F. C. Ricardo, Grenadier Guards, as aide-de-camp to Lord Cowper in Ireland, must be viewed as a well-deserved acknowledgment of that officer's services. Lieutenant Ricardo has been holding for some time past the appointment of Adjutant of the School of Instruction for Officers of the Auxiliary Forces at Wellington Barracks, a position which he has filled with much credit to himself.

The attention of the War Office is most earnestly called to the present state of relations between the military and civil powers in the unhappy transition period in the existence of our Militia, as embodied and disembodied spirits. Without any desire to point any moral or adorn any tale by special illustrations, we may rely on the general experience of all concerned to support our allegation that the disbanding of a Militia regiment is generally followed by an orgie. The battalion, released from its officers' control, is suddenly let loose on the world, which is afraid or unable to deal with it. Would it not be well, especially in Ireland, where the Militia are apt to be in very high fine spirits, to arrange for the payment of the men after each has reached his village or town, instead of giving them all their money at the same time, and that the time when they are most likely to spend and misuse it? The results of the present practice are certainly very often deplorable.

Colonel Owen Williams, Royal Horse Guards, will on Monday next ask the Secretary of State for War when it is the intention of her Majesty's Government to lay upon the table of the House the report of the Royal Commission on the Army presided over by General Airey.

Major W. H. Izod, Royal Artillery, has been appointed a Captain Instructor at the School of Gunnery, vice Major G. J. Burgmann, R.A., whose five years' service in the appointment has expired.

We are informed that the question of the compulsory retirement of Deputy-Commissary Gordon, late of the Ordnance Store Department, will shortly be brought before the House of Commons. The case of this officer has been already alluded to by ourselves and contemporaries. He has been hard-worked in the Ordnance Store Department for upwards of twenty years, and so much was thought at the War Office of his ability and experience that he was selected for service in the Zulu war, throughout which he was well known for the energy and zeal he displayed during the campaign, and was specially recommended for promotion at its termination. He returned to England, and found himself rewarded by compulsory retirement on full pay. Mr. Gordon has served three times on active service (more than any other officer of his Department). He is in the prime of life, and well known throughout the Service for his ability and merit, and we hope he will find numerous supporters. Comparisons are odious, but this would almost appear a case where, if such were fairly instituted, we venture to think he would be the gainer.

Brigadier-General R. C. Stewart, C.B., embarks at Southampton on Thursday next, in the P. and O. Company's steamer Deccan, en route to India, to take up his command in Madras.

The friends of that most ill-used class, the Army Veterinary Surgeons, will be glad to notice that the members of the department, profiting by the example set them by other departments of the Army, have decided to hold an annual dinner in London. We wish the proposal all success. There can be no two opinions as to the benefits which are likely to result from such a gathering. The treatment the officers of the department have lately been subjected to has been anything but creditable to those in authority, and we shall hope to learn that at the forthcoming meeting the chairman may be able to announce that justice is at length to be done to a most deserving body of officers, who have performed valuable services at the Cape, but have received most inconsiderate treatment, and have for a long term of years had to put up with a succession of disappointments, in the endeavours they have made to receive that encouragement which is very properly extended to most of the other departments of the Army.

Nearly two months ago the destination of A Battery A Brigade, R.H.A., was changed from Newbridge to the St. John's Wood Barracks. Since then the order for the battery to march has been daily expected, and all the necessary arrangements have been made. The battery named to relieve it has arrived at Aldershot from Exeter, and is put up temporarily, partly in huts, partly under canvas, more than two miles away from the rest of the Horse Artillery. In both batteries, both officers and men have been put to the greatest inconvenience and expense, and as yet no end can be foreseen to it, for information has now been received that the move of the battery to London has not been finally settled! There cannot be much difficulty in deciding whether a battery is to move or not.

Lieutenant-General C. J. Wright becomes Colonel-Commandant in the Royal Artillery, in consequence of the death of Lieutenant-General H. S. Rowan, C.B.

Accepting with charming frankness all the principles of their predecessors in regard to external, and as far as we know yet, internal, relations, her Majesty's Government have announced that the Queen intends to maintain her supremacy over the Transvaal. To the Army that is not very agreeable news, for some portion of it must serve there till the indefinite and, we believe, exceedingly remote period of time when Confederation may provide for the repression of the Boers and the ascendancy of the British in that vast but not profitable territory. Confederation is an ignis fatuus, only that those who meddle with it will burn their fingers. The colonists see through the transparent flame which Lord Carnarvon lighted, and which is now worshipped by Lord Kimberley, and they are not likely to incur costs and charges for doing that which the British taxpayer has hitherto done for them, unless they are subjected to some more powerful influences than even Sir Bartle Frere's tenacity, address, and diplomatic resources. The regard possessed for the safety of those whom Lord Kimberley styles "indigenous races," might be doubted by those who look only to the practical facts that the Queen's Army has killed more of them in Zululand and in the Sekukuni campaign than were slain by Cetewayo and all the Boers together. Besides that, the greater part of the black population in the Transvaal are not indigenous at all. They are immigrant or refugee races. But how are the Boers, who constitute the enormously preponderating majority of the white population, to be made to enjoy "institutions based on large and liberal principles of self-government?" The Transvaal is now governed by a Legislative Council which has not the remotest resemblance to any freely elected representative body, and Sir Owen Lanyon, enlightened, liberal, and large-minded as he is, cannot be said to be acting as anything but a Proconsul of the Foreign Office, whose authority is based on armed force.

The experiments of the Military Balloon Committee are to be temporarily transferred from Woolwich to Aldershot during the summer.

An effort is being made to consecrate the field of Isandhlwana, by the erection of a memorial church. The ground lies in the territory of the loyal Hlubi, the only chief who at present is anxious for the return of white teachers. It is intended that the church, with school and needful buildings, should cost about £2,000. An English lady further purposes, at her own expense, to build a mausoleum for the reception of the bones of those who died upon the field, as a special memorial to the 24th Regiment.

ALBATROSS, Com. A. Errington, was to leave Singapore for Labuan on the 24th ult.

ATALANTA. The following statement was made in the House of Lords by the First Lord of the Admiralty on Monday:—"I think it is right to inform your Lordships that the Naval members of the Board of Admiralty see no hope whatever of the safety of the Atalanta; and as so many of your Lordships take an interest in the ship, I have desired charts to be placed in the library, showing the evidence upon which that conclusion has been arrived at. The logs of some forty vessels have been consulted, and it has been proved that between Feb. 12 and 16 a terrific gale spread over a considerable portion of the Atlantic. Some eighteen vessels reported at Lloyd's as missing have perished in that gale. On Feb. 12 a Norwegian barque was dismasted in the Atlantic, and she would have foundered, but that her cargo was composed of cotton. Another vessel did founder, and as your Lordships will see from the chart, she must have gone down in the terrific gale in which the Norwegian ship was. My Lords, if the Atalanta had passed through that gale, her further course was clear, and she would have been in the Channel on Feb. 20; but if she had been dismasted, the winds being westerly, she would have arrived a very few days later in the Channel; and even if she had drifted about, she must still have drifted eastward, and under any circumstances she would have passed through a tract of ocean which we know, from the logs of merchant vessels at that time which have been examined, was crowded with sailing and steaming merchant ships. The track has been marked upon another chart which has been prepared by the Admiralty. In the opinion of those who are authorities in the matter, it would have been impossible for any ship, however disabled, to have been detained so long, the wind having been what I have described it to be during that time. My Lords, the late Board of Admiralty, as your Lordships may well understand, were even earlier than the public anxious as to the fate of the Atalanta, and they took every measure which could be taken to search for the vessel, as soon as they became anxious for her safety. As I have said before, the Naval members of the Admiralty have come to the conclusion that no further hope remains of the safety of the vessel, and I need hardly assure your Lordships that those who have been in any way connected with this inquiry feel as deeply as the noble Lord who has just spoken great sympathy with those who had relatives on board. The noble Lord has said, with perfect truth, that those who have lost their lives in the Atalanta have lost their lives in the service of their Queen and their country just as much as if they had lost their lives in an engagement. My Lords, if there had been any survivors of the Atalanta, the ordinary and necessary course would have been to order a court-martial to assemble to try the survivors for the loss of the ship, in which the fullest inquiry would have taken place into such of the circumstances as could have been made the subject of investigation. But, my Lords, under the present circumstances, it was necessary for the Board of Admiralty to take a different course, and it has been determined, after full consideration, to appoint a committee for the purpose of investigating the loss of the ship. That committee will be presided over by Admiral Ryder, the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, who was in no degree concerned in fitting out the ship, he having been appointed to his present command after the ship started on her voyage. Vice-Admiral Randolph, Mr. Rothery, the Wreck Commissioner, who is experienced in inquiries into the causes of wrecks; Staff Capt. Batt, of the Royal Navy, and an officer eminently qualified for an inquiry of this kind; and the fifth member will be a gentleman who was recommended to me by the chairman of Lloyd's, whom I consulted on the subject. His name is Mr. Wayland, who was late chief surveyor to Lloyd's Registry, and is now the secretary to Lloyd's. I am satisfied, my Lords, that this committee is so constituted as to give the Board of Admiralty assurance that a full and complete inquiry will take place into the circumstances of the fitting-out of the ship. The instructions to be given to the committee will be that they should report their opinion as to the stability, seaworthiness, and efficiency of the ship, and whether she was equipped and manned so as to fit her for the service in which she was employed. I believe, my Lords, those instructions will include all those points which were mentioned by my noble friend. My Lords, the evidence will be taken by this committee in public, in the same manner as before a court-martial. I have only to add that I am in communication with the late First Lord of the Admiralty upon this subject, and he has expressed to me his concurrence in the course which is proposed, and his desire—as it is quite natural it should be—that the inquiry should be as complete and as full as possible." In the House of Commons on Thursday, Mr. Jenkins called attention to the proposed inquiry into the loss of the Atalanta, and moved a resolution condemning the composition of the committee as partaking too much of a departmental character. Lord Ramsay bore testimony to the perfect independence of naval officers, and denied that they would be at all likely to bring in a verdict simply to please the Admiralty. Lord H. Lennox, though originally disposed to prefer a more civilian inquiry, in order to remove the distrust felt by the classes who manned our Navy, had every confidence in the tribunal now proposed by the Government. Mr. Norwood agreed with Mr. Jenkins that the committee ought to have been of a more civilian character. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, after assuring the House that the Admiralty was determined to have a full and independent inquiry, showed that this was not a mere departmental committee, and that this was the first occasion on which the civilian element had been introduced into such an inquiry. If there had been a survivor, he pointed out that there would have been a court-martial, which would have reported, as in the cases of the Eurydice, Captain, and Megæra, not only on the cause of disaster, but on the fitting-out, &c., of the ship. Naval officers, he asserted, had always exercised an independent judgment, and were always quite ready adversely to criticise the action of the Admiralty. Mr. W. H. Smith took the same view, and entirely approved the course adopted by the Admiralty. Mr. E. J. Reed disapproved the composition of the committee, and after some remarks from Mr. Magniac the motion was withdrawn. The Brighton Gazette of Thursday contains a somewhat extraordinary statement concerning the Atalanta. It says:—"We have special information from an authentic source, that so long ago as May 4 a sailor of the Mercantile Marine, whose name is known, and who has been some time in Newhaven and Brighton, communicated direct to the Admiralty full particulars, or at least the means of obtaining the full particulars, and giving the reason why he was unable or afraid to come forward in the matter himself. This communication seems to have been ignored, and on the 12th or 13th he wrote again, saying that he knew what certain parties were making out of the retention of the facts, and that he thought it wrong they should be longer withheld. This was again ignored; but the next day or so the Admiralty sent a letter for insertion in the daily papers, saying that they thought all hope of the Atalanta must now be abandoned!" The journal suggests that the offer of a reward was probably made with the view of inducing the man to come forward, but the same influence which prevented his coming forward in the first instance will probably have the same effect now. The Gazette concludes with a significant remark. It says:—"When we add the fact—which is beyond all doubt—that during the present week certain not obscure persons, both in Brighton and London, have had in their hands a chart 'lined' and marked with minute details of the Atalanta, at a date since any official or other information can be obtained of her, or is ever likely to be, we think we are justified in saying a very great mystery surrounds the whole matter, and that our information is special and extraordinary."

BACCHANTE, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, which is to be out of the dockyard at Portsmouth by the 10th prox., is shipping stores for a twelvemonth's consumption and is undergoing a general overhaul. Prince George of Wales will not rejoin her till just before she sails. As she will be ready for sea at the same time as the First Reserve Squadron, she is expected to accompany the vessels in their cruise under Rear-Admiral his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, as far as the Baltic.

BITTERN, Com. E. B. Pusey, has been sent to Cyprus, and arrived at Larnaca on Thursday last.

BLANCHE, Capt. G. Knowles. A cricket-match between representatives of the starboard and port watches of the Blanche was played on April 14, at Somerset, Bermuda, and resulted in a victory for the port watch by 15 runs. The following were the scores:—Starboard watch: 1st innings, 35; 2nd innings, 37. Port watch: 1st innings, 40; 2nd innings, 47. In the return match, however, which was played two days subsequently, the starboard watch came off victorious, making 66 in the first innings and 102 in the second, as against their opponents' 73 in the first and 27 in the second, thus beating them by 68 runs.

CRUISER, Com. Wetherall, has been sent away on another cruise from Malta, having left to hover between Syracuse and Corfu. Letters for her should be addressed to the latter place.

DREADNOUGHT. To avoid the repetition of such a disaster as occurred on board the Thunderer by the explosion of one of her 38-ton guns, the Admiralty have ordered the experimental adoption on board the Dreadnought, turret-ship, of an automatic contrivance for locking a gun at firing-point until the discharge has actually taken place.

DRUID, Capt. W. R. Kennedy. A telegram from Halifax, dated 23rd inst., announces the arrival at St. John's of the Druid, Flamingo, and Contest.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON. The flag of Admiral Alfred P. Ryder was struck on board the Duke of Wellington at sunset on Saturday, the Admiral having gone on a week's leave. The flag of Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley has been transferred from the Asia to the Duke of Wellington during his absence.

EUPHRATES, Capt. Brownrigg, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday morning from Bombay, which place she left on April 23. She brought 413 invalids and 148 time-expired men for Netley; 117 men belonging to the Royal Artillery, for Woolwich; 87 women, and 209 children. The passenger list included details from no fewer than 71 regiments and departments. Serjt. Riall and one man of the 2nd Batn. 13th, and one man each of the 2nd Batn. 1st Regt., 48th, and 2nd Batn. 60th died during the voyage. The arrival of the Euphrates completes the trooping season of 1879-80.

EURYALUS, Capt R. King, flag of Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, having rehoisted his flag on board his own ship, the Euryalus, intends once again to put to sea from Bombay, and purposes leaving for Trincomalee on June 1.

FALCON, Com. B. F. Clarke, has taken duty in the Bosphorus, where she will take the place of the Rapid. Her address will be Constantinople.

FLYING FISH, Lieut.-Com. Richard F. Hoskyn, arrived at Malta on Thursday, May 27.

FOXHOUND, Lieut.-Com. Nowell, arrived at Singapore from Hong Kong on Dec. 10, 1879. Since then she has, with the exception of a short cruise to Penang, Klang, and Malacca, been continually at this place. The Foxhound has now been a year on the station, and with the exception of a short visit to Hong Kong for a purpose anything but gratifying to her officers, has continually been at Singapore. Admiral Coote, on inspecting the ship, expressed his pleasure and gratification to Lieut. Nowell. Officers and men are now anxiously expecting orders to go north. We reported last week the dramatic performance of the officers of this ship for the Irish relief fund, of which the Singapore Times says:—"It is impossible to speak too highly of the charitable and generous impulses of the officers and men of the Foxhound in having come forward, unsolicited, to give an entertainment in the Town Hall in behalf of the fund now being collected to relieve our distressed Irish fellow-countrymen. The hall was crowded on the occasion, and the three lively pieces chosen and acted with a dramatic instinct and ability prove plainly that the performers are no novices in histrionic art, are happy in the security of confidence on the stage, and have no mean eye to effect." Mr. C. N. Palmer, Mr. Mugliston, and Mr. Clow are highly spoken of.

GARNET, Capt. Loftus Jones. In giving a résumé of Capt. Jones's services last week we omitted to state that he commanded the Valorous, paddle-frigate, from Feb. 1875, to Feb. 1878; also the Prince Albert, turret-ship, from April, 1878, to Aug. 30 of the same year, when the Special-Service Squadron was dispersed, and the Prince Albert paid off. Capt. James Erskine, the new Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, had, by last information, returned to Maldonado from a cruise on April 21, being then unaware of his new appointment. It appears, however, that he had ordered the whole of the ships under his command to meet him there, so that he would be able to make a final inspection of the Elk, Forward, and Swallow, and leave the command in good order for his successor.—Hampshire Telegraph.

HART, Com. R. Evans, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday from the China station, and is expected to remain at that port to pay off. It will be remembered that the Hart was commissioned at Devonport about the middle of June, 1870, for the Cape of Good Hope, and, after service on that station, proceeded to the Mediterranean, and was recommissioned at Malta in Feb. 1874, and was afterwards sent on to China, when she was again recommissioned at Hong Kong on May 11, 1877.

HIMALAYA, Capt. Brent, was taken out of Keyham on Wednesday, and placed at moorings off the dockyard. She embarked Captain Foot and other officers, with the new crew for the Ruby, and sailed for the East Indies on Wednesday. The ship has also been ordered to convey a small draft of the 1st Batn. 20th Regt. from Malta to Cyprus, and will afterwards proceed direct to Bombay to discharge all her naval and military passengers, and return home with the late Viceroy of India, the Earl of Lytton, and family. The Himalaya is due at Portsmouth the last week in August.

INDUSTRY, Staff Com. W. T. Tregidgo, was placed in the basin at Devonport Dockyard on Wednesday to prepare for paying off. She is to be placed in the fourth division of the Steam Reserve.

INFLEXIBLE is to be completed by the end of September, and, if required, could proceed upon the trials of her heavy armament in the following month. Experiments are still in progress to determine the practicability of illuminating her decks by means of the electric light; but though the light answers well now she is in dock, it is doubted whether equally satisfactory results will be obtained when she is under weigh, especially during the firing of her four 80-ton guns. The crowns of her turrets have been only temporarily placed in position, and will be taken off for the purpose of lowering these monster weapons into the turrets. The firing of a broadside on board her is expected to do much damage to her superstructure, and consequently the fitting-up of the cabins on the after-part of the upper deck is postponed.—Portsmouth Times.

Jackal, Lieut. the Hon. R. Bingham, has been outside Plymouth Breakwater for steam trial. The run is reported satisfactory, and the ship is ready to proceed to Oban when ordered.

Newcastle, Capt. Kelly, has had her defects made good. Her boilers are nearly worn out, but will probably last about six months longer with reduced pressure of steam. W. J. Perkins, ordinary seaman of this vessel, whilst at work on deck, tripped over some gear and fell on the deck on his left shoulder and broke his collar-bone on Wednesday.

Northampton, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flag of Sir Leopold M'Clintock, was to leave Bermuda for Halifax on the 11th inst. He has sent the Druid, having under her orders the Contest and Flamingo, to watch over the interests of the Newfoundland fisheries.

Phœnix, Com. H. H. Grenfell, having fallen in with the steamer Iduna, bound from Pomaron to Liverpool, disabled by reason of her main shaft having broken, towed that steamer into Scilly on May 27.

Plover, Com. Stewart, respecting the safety of which there has been considerable anxiety, arrived at Vigo on Saturday. She was commissioned at Portsmouth in June, 1876, for the North American and West Indies station, and is coming home to be paid off.

Ruby. Alluding to the appointment of Capt. Foot to this ship, the Hampshire Telegraph says:—"Capt. Foot, who has been selected for the command of this ship, is one who knows the East Coast of Africa thoroughly, and who has always taken a great interest in the suppression of the slave trade, and only recently returned from a visit made to Zanzibar on his own account when on half-pay. He is acquainted with the Swahili tongue, and the Admiralty have certainly made a good selection in naming him for the command of the Ruby, which will again be employed on the East Coast on slave-trade duties."

Tamar, Capt. T. H. Royse, was placed in dry dock at Keyham Yard on Wednesday, to have valves examined and undergo general repairs.

Vestal, Com. D. Tandy. Notice has been given that preparations are being made for the intended distribution of the slave and tonnage bounties awarded for 18 slaves and the slave-dhow Mahoulli, captured on Nov. 26 and Dec. 6, 1878, by the Vestal. Due notice will be given of the date proposed for the distribution.

Wivern, Com. C. G. Jones, was to leave Singapore for Hong Kong on Wednesday.

PRESENTATION OF THE ALBERT MEDAL TO A COASTGUARDSMAN.

The Queen arrived at Balmoral Castle from Windsor on Saturday afternoon. At Ferry Hill Junction a very large concourse of people had assembled, including the sheriffs of the county and the magistrates of Aberdeen. Her Majesty had intimated her intention of personally presenting the Albert Medal to George Oatley, Coastguardman, for his gallantry in saving the crew of the Swedish vessel Auguste, on Feb. 16 last. The barque was driven on the rocks near Peterhead during a storm. The crew did not understand the working of the rocket apparatus which was employed on the occasion, and were in imminent peril, when Oatley gallantly entered the water and swam through the surf to the vessel with a line, by means of which the crew were brought safely ashore. A small platform had been erected at the junction, on which the ceremony of presentation was to be held. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice left the saloon and were conducted to the platform. Gen. Sir H. Ponsonby presented Capt. Best, R.N., to the Queen, and the Captain introduced Oatley, who is one of his men in the Coastguard Division. Her Majesty attached the medal to Oatley's left breast, and graciously remarked that she had much pleasure in decorating him with it for his gallant conduct in saving life. Sir W. Wiseman and the officers of the Clyde, with a number of the men of that vessel and of the Coastguard in the district, formed a guard of honour, and presented arms when the train arrived and when it departed.

Sir,—In the Army and Navy Gazette of some months ago it was stated that successful experiments had been made with electric light under water, and that a large circle of light had been steadily maintained for a long time. No details were given about the machines that were used. Would you kindly oblige me by showing me the way to get a more detailed description, or can you give me the address of the person or the committee on the head of the experiments?—I am, &c., Scheveningen, May 20. Zuylen.

[Can any of our readers kindly furnish this information? —Ed. A. & N. G.]

The Admiralty has awarded medals for long service and good conduct to the following men:—Daniel A. Gilchrist, writer (first-class), of the Jumna; Henry Hawkins, sick-berth steward, of the Duke of Wellington; William Bennett, boatswain's mate, of the Cambridge; George F. Fletcher, ship's steward, of the Alert; George Cleverton, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard.

It has been directed by Fleet Circular No. 18, of May 12, 1880, that Naval brass shall in future be substituted for Muntz-metal for fastenings under water. In making Naval brass, the following proportions will be adhered to as nearly as possible:—Copper, 62 parts; zinc, 37 parts; tin, 1 part; and especial care taken that the zinc does not exceed the above proportion. The letters "N.B." (Naval brass) will be stamped on all sheets and boltstaves manufactured. Fleet Circular No. 67 S, of Nov. 19, 1879, is hereby modified by the substitution of the words "Naval brass" for the words "gun-metal," in the second and sixth lines of par. 4; and by omitting all after the word "fastenings" in the sixth line of the same paragraph.

TORPEDO-BOAT TACTICS.

The Admiralty trial of the Hotchkiss revolving cannon having now been brought to a close, our Portsmouth correspondent forwards us the following interesting details, gathered from official sources. We are the more inclined to give these particulars, from the fact that it has been hinted that we have shown an inclination to speak more favourably of one than of the other of the competing guns, before the trials had been concluded; and although we feel sure that we should not be credited with any other motive than the desire that the Services should secure the best weapon, the following facts will prove to the advocates of the revolving cannon that our remarks have been borne out by results. The trials have shown that the Nordenfeldt naval gun fires on an average somewhat more than three times as rapidly as the Hotchkiss, the actual mean of all the experiments being 48 shots and 15 per minute respectively. The Nordenfeldt gun also hit on an average about 3.5 times as often as the Hotchkiss, the actual mean number of hits being 24 to 7 per minute; and also gave on the whole, as well as on an average, more hits than the Hotchkiss gun fired shots, the actual proportions being 348 hits to 334 shots, fired by the revolving cannon during the sea trials, when model torpedo-boats were used as targets; and on an average, 24 hits were made per minute with the Nordenfeldt to 15 shots per minute fired by the Hotchkiss. The per-centage of shots fired by the Nordenfeldt was also more favourable than for the Hotchkiss, the actual mean percentage in each case being 47.5 and 42.25. When fire was opened on the torpedo-boats at ranges within 500 yards, beyond which these small craft cannot be seen in mist, rain, or at dusk, it was found that the effectiveness of the Nordenfeldt gun was greatly increased by its rapid volleys, while the rapidity of fire of the Hotchkiss could not be increased to any great extent. This was more marked during the seventh and eighth runs of the Medway, when the Nordenfeldt hit the torpedo boat, although end on, more often than once in each second, making more than twice as many hits as the Hotchkiss fired shots, or 115 hits to 50 shots, and striking the boat four times as often as did the Hotchkiss, the actual hits being 66 to 15. During the whole of the trials, the Nordenfelt gun worked evenly and satisfactorily; no spring, firing-pin, or other part of the mechanism broke, was deranged, or had even to be replaced. It is also acknowledged that the improvements introduced by Mr. Nordenfeldt have rendered accident almost an impossibility. One thousand two hundred shots were fired in one day without cleaning, and the gun still worked quite smoothly. No jamb occurred, and during the excessively rapid firing of forty shots in seven seconds, only one slight hitch took place, when an empty cartridge-case had not time to fall. This, however, was immediately cleared away, during the firing, without taking out the mechanism.

The Hotchkiss gun worked fairly well, except that previous to the firing at sea, one of the bearings of the large cam-shaft broke, and the gun had to be replaced by another, to which, however, the same accident also happened. This may be due to Mr. Hotchkiss having used for these trials more violent powder than the French Navy allows for the same gun, or than is used in the English Navy for the Nordenfeldt gun. On the other hand, the use of this violent powder most probably accounts for the fact that better penetrative results were obtained during these than at any previous trials carried out in this or in foreign countries. But several percussion caps were blown out of the cartridge-cases inside the mechanism, jambing its working. Pieces of the cartridge-cases were also torn off. Two shells exploded prematurely. One shell, owing to a defect in the cartridge, failed to be fired, and remained wedged in the chamber. By good-luck, the next shell entering the same barrel did not explode on striking its base. The jambed projectile disabled the gun for half an hour, great care being required to avoid an explosion in extracting it. When firing 100 consecutive rounds rapidly without cleaning, the Hotchkiss gun worked so heavily, that a second man had to assist the gunner repeatedly in working the crank. During the delay caused by the jambed shell, it was ascertained that out of twenty shots previously fired during two minutes at the target, at from 1,500 to 1,000 yards' range, none had struck the boat. The firing-pin of this gun broke during the trials.

These and previous trials have demonstrated that, for penetration, the Nordenfeldt one-inch solid steel bullets give better results than the Hotchkiss 1½-inch shells, and as nearly as possible the same penetration as the Hotchkiss solid shot. The accuracy of the two guns is about the same at short ranges, but at long ranges, owing to the initial velocity of the Nordenfeldt projectile being 150 feet greater than that of the Hotchkiss, with a proportionately better trajectory, its fire is the most accurate. These results are solely due to the fact that the Nordenfeldt gun is the best proportioned. In other words, the ballistic properties of the Government Naval gun are far superior to those of the revolving cannon constructed by Mr. Hotchkiss to fire a projectile but little over two calibres in length, with a proportionately small charge of powder. The Nordenfeldt projectile is comparatively longer, and the charge of powder in this gun is also in proper proportion to the weight of the projectile, or to the work to be performed. Consequently, it is not astonishing to find that the 1½-in. Nordenfeldt gun, whether firing solid shot or shell, produces twice the results secured by the revolving cannon of the same calibre.

We now have to consider the effect of the results obtained at Spithead on previously accepted ideas regarding the employment of torpedo-boats in naval warfare. We believe we are right in stating that the views of the officers of the Vernon have now greatly changed, and that it is admitted that the utter impossibility of a daylight attack succeeding has been conclusively proved by the results obtained with the Nordenfeldt gun. The natural effect of this change of opinion will be to cause new torpedo-boat tactics to be devised, it being very generally admitted that neither officers nor men could justly be called upon to undertake an attack based on conclusions which omitted to take into consideration the power of the weapon brought to bear against the torpedo-boat. On the other hand, these trials have shown that small shells, capable of piercing the sides of unarmoured ships, can also be employed with advantage, and we understand that for this purpose the Nordenfeldt heavy calibre guns will be employed. The decision on the part of the Admiralty to adhere to the system of rapid firing is a wise one, for, remembering Nelson's dictum,—"In every naval action, something must be left to chance," it is evident that, as remarked by Captain the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, R.N., C.B., "those who can fire the greater number of shots must have the most chances on their side."

THE GUARDS' INDUSTRIAL HOME.

The Rev. Canon Liddon preached in the Royal Military Chapel at the Wellington Barracks on Sunday afternoon last in aid of the Guards' Industrial Home. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Princes Albert Victor and George, and the Grand Duke of Hesse were present. Service commenced at half-past three o'clock. The Hon. E. A. Powis read prayers. The Rev. H. N. Wheeler read the first and the Rev. C. A. Solbe read the second lesson. Col. Moncrieff, Scots Guards, hon. secretary of the Guards' Home, acted as precentor to the choir, which was composed of the drummers of the 2nd Batt. Grenadier Guards and 2nd Batt. Coldstream Guards. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Liddon. Canon Liddon said that the soldiers who fought our battles had a strong claim on their countrymen, and it was upon that ground he strongly recommended to the attention and support of the congregation the Guards' Industrial Home. It was a charitable enterprise, admirable in its conception, and no less admirable in its working. It educated, clothed, and supported the daughters of non-commissioned officers and men of the Brigade of Guards. It secured for them sound religious instruction, and provided for them becoming good and useful members of society, as daughters and as mothers of families. It thus satisfied the twofold aim of a good charity; it prevented a good deal of evil, and achieved a great deal of positive good. At the conclusion of the sermon a collection was made, which yielded a sum of £130 10s. We may add that the Guards' Industrial Home, which is situated in Francis Street, Vauxhall-Bridge Road, is now in the seventeenth year of it, existence. The number of girls in the home is 52s 28 of whom are boarded and educated free of expense, the remainder paying £6 annually until they attain the age of about 12 years, when they are transferred to the free list, as vacancies occur. The girls are educated in all branches of household service, and have situations obtained for them when they leave the institution, at the age of 17. Excellent reports have been received of the girls who have left in former years, and in their correspondence with the superintendent, Miss Hilliard, they express their appreciation of the good training and education they have received in the home. They make all their own clothing, and also take in plain needlework, the earnings for which for the past year amounted to about £18; while the value of their work in making up their clothing and house linen is computed at a low estimate to be worth £80 per annum. A considerable share in the management is taken by the Ladies' Committee, who appoint one of their number to be the lady visitor for each month, her duty being to frequently visit the home, and to take a general supervision of the whole establishment.

The Danish screw-corvette Dagmar, Capt. Braem, from St. Thomas's (West Indies), with Prince Waldemar of Denmark on board, put into Plymouth on Tuesday to receive letters and to take in coal and provisions, and sailed for Copenhagen on Wednesday.

The South Australian Land Mortgage and Agency Company (Limited) has been formed, to supply the prosperous and progressive colony of South Australia with an institution similar to those which in other parts of Australia and New Zealand have proved so highly successful and so popular, both with the colonist and with the home investor Local interest in the establishment of such an association leaves no room to doubt that this Company will receive strong colonial support.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

In answer to Col. North, Mr. Childers stated on Monday that the delay in issuing the medal granted by her Majesty on Sept. 1, 1879, to the officers and men of the Army who took part in the Perak expedition arose from the rolls having been sent to India in February last for verification; they were expected back daily, and on their arrival the distribution would be made immediately.

The gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, held their annual athletic sports on the 21st inst., on the spacious lawn of their College. Col. King, R.A., officiated as judge, and Mr. Foord-Kelcey as starter; and the arrangements were conducted by Lieut. Callwell, R.A., and a committee consisting of Capt. Roberts, R.A., Messrs. Aylmer, Brownlow, Mullins, Crawford, Binstead, Jackson, and Duncombe. In summing up, it was found that Mr. Smith and Mr. Hanwell were equally entitled to the silver challenge bugle, which is given to the winner of the greatest number of events; and the prize presented to the winner of most marks was allotted to Mr. Hanwell. Lady Adye presented the prizes, and it was decided that the two gentlemen who had equal rights in the bugle should each hold it for half a year.

The Royal Naval Club, Portsmouth, had a narrow escape on Saturday morning. The parish school-room, next door, caught fire, and the flames were not extinguished till the building had been gutted. The damage to the Naval Club was confined to some injury to the roof.

Of old vessels still employed in the Navy, the Hampshire Telegraph says;—"The Jackal was built at Napier's yard on the Clyde as far back as 1844, and is one of the oldest iron ships in the Service. The tenders to the Duke of Wellington can, however, boast of having some ancient craft amongst them. The old Sprightly was launched more than half a century ago, her date of building being 1823, having been launched from a yard on the Thames and engined by Watt. She and the old Victory, with their somewhat square sterns, take one back to days long gone by, so different are they to ships of the day. The Fire Queen, which is of iron, is also getting up in years, as she was bought into the Service adout thirty-five years ago, and no one knows where she came from. They have looked up her records of repairs, but who made her engines or where she was built no one can tell. Her machinery is of ancient pattern, and when she wants a bolt or nut it has to be specially made for her, as little or nothing in store will fit her, the very threads of her screws being different to those at present in use."

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered (in not less than three-dozen cases) free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application.

It has called forth the loudest praise from persons who have suffered for years from bad legs, abscesses, and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure has passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this Ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows, by restraining inflammation and allaying pain. Whenever this Ointment has been once used, it has established its own worth, and has again been eagerly sought for, as the easiest and safest remedy for all ulcerous complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism, and gout, the same application, properly used gives wonderful relief.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to supply the prosperous and progressive Colony of South Australia with an institution similar to those which, in other parts of Australia and New Zealand, have proved so highly successful and so popular both with the Colonist and with the home investor. Local interest in the establishment of such an association leaves no room to doubt that this Company will receive strong Colonial support.

Notwithstanding the fact that in the neighbouring Colonies several Land Mortgage Companies are in successful operation, no Company doing a Mortgage and Agency business exists specially identified with the Colony of South Australia—the granary of Australasia, as well as containing by far the largest area of cultivated land in the group.

The growing importance of South Australia, as evidenced by its commercial, agricultural, pastoral, and mineral statistics, as well as by the rapid increase of its population and revenue, point to it as one of the most promising fields for the increased employment of English capital. Recent legislation, by connecting the interior with the coast by railways, and offering land on deferred payments, has enormously stimulated agricultural settlement. The fact that according to the most recently published statistics £4,253,800 was owing to the Government for lands so purchased may be urged as in itself a sufficient justification for the establishment of this Company. Last year's crop of wheat, raised on 1,458,096 acres left a surplus of 11,340,039 bushels available for export, after satisfying local requirements for consumption and for seed.

Pastoral occupation also proceeds with rapid strides, extended exploration showing that large areas to the North and West, hitherto believed to be unsuitable for settlement, may be profitably occupied by cattle, in the breeding of which the neighbouring Colonies have as yet been in advance of South Australia. Much good sheep country also remains to be taken up, which must largely increase the production of a class of Wool in great favour with home and Continental manufacturers.

The business of the Company will consist in making advances on freehold, and other interests in land and buildings, and in developing the resources of the Colony by assisting the Settlers with loans on their wool and other produce, and in the general transaction of Agency business under adequate securities. Registration of title having for many years been in operation in South Australia, transfers, mortgages, and liens are promptly and inexpensively effected.

The principle on which most of the Colonial Land Companies have been so successfully conducted—namely, working chiefly on Debenture Capital with a large portion of the Share Capital in reserve as collateral security, has been adopted by the Directors. It is intended, therefore, to limit the called-up capital to one-fifth of the nominal value of the Shares, mortgage debentures being issued to an amount not exceeding the remaining four-fifths, on such terms, and bearing such interest, as may be agreed upon, and with attached Interest Coupons. Money will also be received on Deposit at agreed rates of interest, and special Mortgages may be effected with or without the Company's guarantee.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the office of the Solicitors. Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the Bankers or Brokers, or at the Company's Offices.—London, May, 1880.

To find the increased capital, they intend to form themselves into a Limited Company, but they wish to avoid having the Company promoted in the ordinary way, and for this end would be glad to find a few Gentlemen with capital, who would join them, after the strictest investigation, in forming a Company on the same principle as other eminent firms have recently done, without, in the first instance, offering shares to the public. PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

SIR FREDERICK HAINES has most exhaustively reviewed the recommendations of the Indian Army Reorganisation Commission, and his remarks are worthy of the most careful examination. Sir Frederick has been accused of want of energy in connection with the Afghan war, whether rightly or wrongly we shall not here stop to consider. Probably if his mouth were unsealed, he would be able to show that through no fault of his own he has been placed in a false position, and has not been a free agent. One thing is certain, which is, that few officers combine European and Indian military experience in a higher degree than Sir Frederick Haines; and the Minute before us proves that this experience has not been wasted, and that as an organiser, or, at all events, a critic of organisation, he possesses no mean power. It is impossible, within the limits to which we are necessarily confined, to follow out the whole of the arguments employed by Sir Frederick Haines to show that the Commission have in many instances arrived at dangerously false conclusions. We shall therefore only deal with some of the more important paragraphs. When the Commission was first appointed, its composition met with much adverse criticism, and it must be admitted that regimental experience was poorly represented. Nor was this the only defect. Sir Frederick points out that owing to some members arriving late, and others leaving early, "very few meetings of the whole body as constituted by the Government of India could have been held." He suggests that the conclusions arrived at were evidently foregone, and there are certainly grounds for believing that such was the case. As Sir Frederick's term of office is approaching its term, he may fairly be exonerated from any suspicion of personal feeling in his condemnation of the suggestion that the Commander-in-Chief should be deprived of his seat in Council, and generally to lower his position. Why this suggestion should have been made we cannot imagine. Why it should not have been made is quite clear to us. The existing system has, as regards the Commander-in-Chief, worked well, save that his counsels have not always received the consideration due to the advice of the responsible military adviser of the Viceroy. It is now proposed to make him a sort of Chief of the Staff, with little save bureaucratic work. A less exalted, a less highly paid officer would surely suffice for such functions. Either the Commander-in-Chief will be a dummy, or else the four lieutenant-generals commanding corps d'armée will be harassed by perpetual useless interference. The Commission urges that the Commander-in-Chief, as Member of Council, holds an anomalous position towards the Government. We fail to see this. Surely nothing can be more natural and practical than that the Viceroy's Council should consist of his chief subordinates. As a matter of fact, no inconvenience or friction has resulted from the double functions of the Commander-in-Chief. As to anomalies, what can be a greater anomaly than giving a barrister the command of the Army, or a banker the direction of the Navy? The very mixed Commission, not being remarkable for practical military experience, falls into the mistake so common with theorists, and is under the impression that views as old as the hills are new. To use a vulgar expression, they seek to "teach their grandmothers to suck eggs." Indeed, Sir Frederick Haines accuses them in pretty plain terms of endeavouring to perform this feat. He in effect says, "You say the Commander-in-Chief should do this and that, but this and that is precisely what he has always done." With regard to the recommendations of the Commission respecting the Staff, Sir Frederick Haines disapproves of them. He sees no advantage in an amalgamated Staff, and having himself served in the Adjutant-General's Department, he has personal experience on the subject. He says that there is no difficulty in transferring an officer from the Quartermaster to the Adjutant-General's Department, or vice versa; but he protests against the clumsy titles of "Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General." With all due deference to Sir Frederick Haines, and while allowing that there is some truth in what he says, we decidedly advocate the amalgamation of the Staff. There is always a good deal of friction and jealousy—especially in India—between the Adjutant-General's and Quartermaster-General's Departments on the Divisional Staff. One becomes practically Chief of the Staff, while the other sinks into insignificance, and does not possess his proper weight. A great deal of time is also wasted in correspondence between the two Departments. Moreover, it frequently happens that one Department is over-worked, while the other has comparatively little to do. We are, therefore, of opinion that increased efficiency and considerable economy of labour would be gained by the amalgamation proposed by the Commission. For special work, officers with special qualifications could be employed just as well under the proposed as under the existing system. As to the clumsy nomenclature of which Sir Frederick Haines complains, we quite share his feeling; but surely a remedy could be here easily applied. As to the question of the propriety of appointing a Chief to the Staff, that would be a necessary consequence of the amalgamation of the two Departments. We conceive that such an officer would save the Commander-in-Chief much trouble in matters of detail, and the experience of all foreign armies is in favour of the arrangement. The Army Corps question, with which is connected that of localisation, is strongly condemned by Sir Frederick Haines. He points out with much truth that though it may suit Germany, it is singularly inappropriate in India. "The soldier, the cultivator, and the ryot have a certain amount of homogeneity, the ruling race alone being alien. . . . . . I am of opinion that it would be highly objectionable to leave Oude, Rohilkund, and the North-Western Provinces in the hands of native troops, which have been drawn only from the population of those territories. I hesitate not to affirm this to be a cardinal error fraught with danger, against which the experience of the past conveys an impressive warning. But when we come to apply this system to the Punjab, I cannot but think that we are on the point of committing a blunder of the first magnitude, and one that could hardly fail to carry with it most baneful results." He fortifies his position by referring to the reorganisation of the Indian Army after the Mutiny, "when the very essence of our policy was to divide and command," and by quoting the opinions of some of our most celebrated statesmen and soldiers. He likewise points out that, as regards forming an army for active operations, it could be done as quickly and easily under the present as under the proposed system. The diminishing of the number of cadres and increasing the strength of regiments he condemns, because sooner or later tactical units would be broken up into detachments, by which efficiency would be diminished. The answer to that is that it is questionable whether it is wise, especially in these days of railways and telegraphic communication, to occupy so many scattered posts as we have been in the habit of doing. With respect to the proposed reduction of the number of Horse Artillery batteries from fifteen to ten, he objects, as if an army of two corps were to take the field, there would be no reserve and no provision for requirements elsewhere Indeed, as it is, of the six Bengal Horse Artillery batteries in the field and four in the rear, the latter have been so denuded of men to replace casualties at the front, that they have become practically almost ineffective. Bombay, when it sends its two Horse Artillery batteries into the field, will have no reserve whatever. Sir Frederick likewise objects to the reduction of the number of the field batteries for similar reasons, and points out that with the new system, after despatching two Army Corps beyond the frontier, we should only, including the sixteen smooth-bore guns of the Hyderabad Contingent, have for the troops left in India, no guns for the Cavalry, and but 1·96 guns per 1,000 of the Infantry. The reduction of the garrison batteries from twenty to seventeen would work very ill, as it would be difficult to provide an officer for each detachment. Concerning the distribution and allotment of garrisons, we shall not say much, though Sir Frederick Haines goes into the question thoroughly. The fact is, the subject is so vast and important that it demands an article to itself alone. We shall confine ourselves, therefore, to remarking that we concur with Sir Frederick Haines in thinking that the proposed arrangement would leave Calcutta dangerously exposed. Here we must conclude with the assurance to our readers that however specious the recommendations of the Commission may seem, they present, when subjected to the light of common-sense and experience, so many practical defects, that we trust that they will be most carefully revised and considerably modified, before they are sanctioned by the home authorities.

The Committee which has been sitting for the past few months to report upon certain questions and proposals submitted by the late Board of Admiralty, relative to the organisation and discipline of the Royal Marine Forces, has brought its proceedings to a close, and the corps anxiously awaits the result of its labours. Though many inquiries have been made, nothing officially has been allowed to transpire. "Strictly confidential" is the only answer vouchsafed. Following the example of its predecessor in 1877, it has sat with closed doors to adjudicate on matters of possibly vital moment to one of the most important and valuable arms of her Majesty's Service, not deigning to call upon a single officer of the corps, beyond those who sat as members, to express an opinion or professional remark, assuming to itself a power that would brook no interference over the destinies of 13,000 men. Remembering the disappointment that followed the promulgation of the report of the aforesaid Committee of 1877, and how its recommendations up to the present time are working to the detriment of a large body of officers, who had borne the heat and burden of the Service, only to find their pensions reduced and themselves denied the Army concessions, no wonder that this fine old corps feels anxious and uneasy as to what this second Committee may have recommended, especially as it is known that one question submitted for consideration was the abolition of the Royal Marine Artillery. With the "sword of Damocles" thus hanging, to what extent it may fall can for the present be only a matter for surmise; still, notwitstanding official reticence, little by little of the supposed doings of this last Committee appear to leak out. It is said, "Bad news travels fast," and bad it is in every sense, if these reports should be verified by facts, viz., another reduction of officers in all ranks. In what manner, or how this reduction—if true—is to be carried out, is also a matter for conjecture; but under any circumstances, it would be a death-blow to the junior grades, who already have suffered enough at the hands of the Authorities. During the last few years, subalterns have reached 15, 16, and even 17 years seniority in that rank, consequent upon the reduction of 92 officers in 1869, and of 33 in 1873. And now another blow seems threatened even still harder than the former ones, considering the present state of the Lieutenants' List. It is, however, to be hoped that if there should be truth in these rumours, they did not emanate from any member of the corps who served on the Committee, some of whom had climbed to the top of the tree,—one especially favoured in this respect having, with no particular service-claim, passed out of his turn to command and further advancement,—as they would naturally be jealous and tenacious of the interests of that Service which had so carefully fostered them through all grades to their present position, and would refrain from lending themselves to any scheme, even for a remote prospect of future advancement to themselves, that would be detrimental to the welfare of their corps. Many letters have lately appeared in the public prints respecting the Royal Marines, as to how far their services are now required and made available by the Royal Navy, and there can be no doubt that the great change that has of late years been effected in the Naval Service, both as regards ships and discipline, has tended in a very great measure to alter the status of Marines when embarked, and has naturally given rise to discussions as to the extent and manner in which their services on board ship are to be utilised. But, whatever may be the result of these deliberations, the corps has a right to demand, so long as it remains in existence, equal consideration and prospects as accorded to other Services. The Royal Marines have no wish to exist on sufferance. If their position and duties are not to be acknowledged, and if they are unsuited for the present condition of the Naval Service, they will accept without a murmur the order for their dissolution. If the Marines are no longer a necessity, if such is the opinion of the Navy and its administrators, is it too much to ask, in the interests of the corps, who number one-third of the Naval fighting strength, that the question may be inquired into and decided, once and for all, by those who are competent to conduct an impartial investigation, viz., a Select Committee of the House of Commons? If it is found by the evidence of responsible Naval officers that the necessity no longer exists for the continuance of the Royal Marine forces as now organised, then let the same tribunal decide as to their future. Should that decision be adverse to its existing constitution, all they ask is, that they may not be made the invariable scapegoat for Naval economy, and be thus made to drag on a life of one disappointment to another, but permitted to die in the full sunshine of their hitherto glorious career, feeling assured that the word "Gibraltar" on their colours, and the valour and fidelity that have ever accompanied their service either on shore or afloat, will remain an enduring monument of their worth in the history of their country.

This week has witnessed the accomplishment of the pious pilgrimage of the Empress Eugénie to the scene of her son's sorrowful but soldierly death. In the discreditable animosity of Mr. Kinglake to the late Emperor is to be found the "excuse" for the outrage of accusing him of cowardice, and of the statement made in a historical work that he turned "green" in moments of peril; but even Mr. Kinglake would admit that the lack of courage which he ascribed to the father was not hereditary. The courage of the young Prince was undoubted, and on a fair field would surely have been conspicuous. He burned for distinction, and his craving for work was intense. It must have been with feelings of which we would rather not indicate our own impression that a British General attended the steps of the heart-broken mother to the fatal spot where Louis Napoleon died. There the marble cross, "In affectionate remembrance of Prince Eugène Louis Joseph Napoleon, Prince Imperial, to mark the spot where, while operating in a reconnaissance with the British troops on June 1, 1879, he was attacked by a party of Zulus, and fell with his face to the foe," was set up on the anniversary of what will be for a great political party in France the dies nefastus of a dynasty, and the Imperial violets were wreathed round the sad memorial. It might be objected that the language of the inscription gave scarcely a correct impression of either the duty in which the Prince was engaged, or of the way in which he was attended. It was not strictly a "reconnaissance" in which he was employed. The country had been examined and even sketched, and Lieutenant Carey, we believe, had expressly asked to go out, that he might verify the sketches he had made; but the Prince, who had been incessant in pressing the Quarter-master-General, Colonel Harrison, for work, was despatched to report on the road, and there was no idea of reconnoitring an enemy or of examining a position. Nor can it be held, we are glad to say, that they were "British troops," properly so called, who attended him. There was one British officer with the party, but the men of Bettington's Horse were not Regulars; they were waifs and strays, picked up in the colony by an enterprising gentleman, and were something like the levies described by Cooper in The Spy, necessarily deficient in discipline and steadiness, whatever other soldierly qualities they might have possessed. It would, perhaps, have been impossible to have been discriminating and exact in such an account of the circumstance, which will be remembered long after the violets are dead, and haply the marble cross itself overthrown. The old Imperial legend of the mystic meaning of the flower ceases to have a meaning now. "Cela reviendra en printemps!"

To judge by the tone of some correspondence we have received, the newly instituted form of Report upon officers, which is to be rendered annually by the captain, or on a ship being paid off or her captain being superseded, does not give satisfaction to those whose names will appear in its columns. It is not surprising to us, on looking over the headings in the return, that officers should feel rather aggrieved that their Lordships should have thought it advisable to call upon the commanding officers of ships to so criticise those serving under them. It is placing a vast power in the hands of a superior officer, and an incalculable amount of harm may be done to one's professional reputation and prospects by the injudicious rendering of such a report. The general conduct of officers afloat and ashore, their ability, zeal, judgment, temper, professional knowledge, temperance, performance of special duties, special acquirements, physical qualities, and whether deserving of advancement, are all to be narrowly criticised by the officer who may for the time being command the ship. To be able to fill up such a return with justice, and without fear of making damaging statements against an officer, a Captain should have been personally acquainted with those upon whom he is called to pass judgment for something more than a few months. But it matters not how short a time an officer may have been on board a ship, on December 31 all these details as to character and ability must be filled in, and placed on record at the Admiralty. The effort thus made by the Admiralty to ensure the selection of the fittest for promotion would be, perhaps, commendable, if these returns could be safely relied upon; but it is a dangerous power to place in the hands of a commanding officer, for if it pleases him to come to the conclusion that an officer under him lacks judgment, and has a temper, it will be perfectly idle for the one thus condemned to tell the Admiralty that he has been misjudged. Whether the report be treated as confidential or otherwise, the effect upon an officer's career will be much the same, and many who have thus far gone through the Service with an unsullied reputation, do not feel comfortable at the prospect of being "picked to pieces" at the end of the year. The custom of giving an officer a certificate to the effect that he was not given to drink, but had been sober while in the ship, is bad enough, and sufficiently lowering to the dignity of the Service, but that is as nothing to the new Return.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday, and made an inspection of his intended flagship, the Hercules, and the three other Coastguard ships which are being refitted at the yard. On Wednesday evening his Royal Highness arrived at Plymouth, and remained the night at Admiralty House, Mount Wise. On Thursday he was to have commenced his annual inspection of the Coastguard stations in the Western District, but was recalled by telegram, owing to the death of the Empress of Russia, and proceeds at once to St. Petersburg.

The First Lord of the Admiralty presided on Monday at the annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, and delivered an address on the progress of geographical research during the past year Captain J. O. Evans, R.N., C.B., Hydrographer of the Admiralty, gave a statement of the work performed during 1879 in the examination and chartering of the seaboard in various parts of the globe; and a report upon Indian surveys in 1878-9. Lord Aberdare was elected president for the ensuing year. The annual dinner was held at Willis's Rooms in the evening, the Duke of Edinburgh in the chair. The Swedish Minister, the Earl of Northbrook, Lord Aberdare, Lord Chelmsford, and Sir Henry Rawlinson were amongst those present.

The First Lord of the Admiralty is expected to visit Liverpool on the 24th inst., to distribute the prizes on board the school-ship Conway.

The Earl of Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, has appointed Mr. E. G. Jenkinson, late Bengal Civil Service, private secretary for business unconnected with Naval matters.

An exhibition of ancient armour of an interesting character was opened on Thursday, at the rooms of the Royal Archæological Institute, in New Burlington Street. Numerous specimens of antique helmets, coats of mail, and various other descriptions of armour, have been collected, and present an almost complete historical record of the changes which from time to time took place in this species of defensive armament. The exhibition will only remain open until the 10th inst., and cannot fail to be of interest to officers of all branches of the Services.

The thanks of the Admiralty have been conveyed by the Foreign Office to the French Government for the steps taken to cause search and inquiry to be made on the coast of Iceland for any traces of the Atalanta.

During the present month the following officers of Royal Marines will reach the age for compulsory retirement, should no vacancy occur to promote them, viz., Captain R. J. Pascoe, on the 21st inst.; and Captain C. E. Servante, on the 25th inst. Both these officers have been granted leave of absence until their time expires.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., intended to leave Bombay on June 1, for a visit to Mauritius and Zanzibar.

In the event of a rupture between Russia and China, Vice-Admiral Shestakoff, now naval agent for special missions to the South European powers, will be given the command of the Russian Pacific squadron.

According to a statement made by the Danish Minister of Marine, the Navy of Denmark is undergoing reorganisation, and will ultimately consist of eight armoured batteries, four unarmoured ships, ten corvettes and schooners, twelve gunboats carrying guns of large calibre, and thirty torpedo boats. The sum of 1,700,000 Danish crowns is to be annually expended for this purpose.

Admiral Alfred P. Ryder returned to Portsmouth from leave of absence on Saturday, and rehoisted his flag on board the Duke of Wellington.

The following removals from the Active Lists have been made during the past month:—Sub-Lieutenant Arthur B. Willson, Midshipman William F. Peel, Assistant-Paymaster John S. Ramsay, Frank Boyeson (engineer for temporary service), Boatswain Thomas Skipton, Lieutenant Henry Lewis Anstruther, R.M.L.I. The following Warrant officers have been pensioned:—Gunner William Stephenson (1859); Boatswains William H. Hunkin (1860) and William Matson (1861).

It is the intention of Lord Henry Lennox, when the Navy Estimates come forward in the House of Commons, to move a resolution calling attention to the necessity for the reorganisation of the Royal Marines. It would be well if some Member would ask if there is any objection to lay on the table of the House a copy of the report of the Departmental Committee which has just been presented to the Board. There is a strong desire to hold it back as a "confidential" report.

Letters have been received at the Admiralty from Captain Morant, of the Valorous, commanding the Irish Relief Squadron, at Galway, up to May 29. The Bruiser and Imogene were also at Galway. The Hawk Goshawk was at Westport, awaiting orders. The was detained at Rathmullen (Lough Swilly) by bad weather, and was to sail on May 31 for Tory Island, Boffin, and coast to Galway. The Relief Squadron on the West Coast of Ireland has been reduced by the withdrawal of the Orwell, which is required for fishery duties.

The Ladies' Committee of the British Arctic expedition, under Commander Cheyne, R.N., are making arrangements for holding a bazaar, to aid in collecting funds for the equipment of the Arctic ship.

We hear that Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., will be given the rank of honorary commander in the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers. As yet, there is no authority for such a rank being held by an officer of this branch of the Service, and an Order in Council will have to be obtained to establish this grade. Lord Ashley, who recently resigned his commission as lieutenant commanding the London Brigade, will not improbably be also offered a step on the Honorary List. It will be a fitting recognition of the energy shown by Mr. Brassey in fathering the Naval Volunteer movement, to give him a higher, though honorary, rank than that of "additional" lieutenant commanding.

The Naval Recreation-ground at Sheerness was opened by Admiral Sir Reginald J. Macdonald, K.C.S.I. A series of athletic sports afterwards took place.

Captain Gordon and several officers of the Vernon have proceeded to Bantry Bay, to be present at the torpedo experiments being carried out by the Hecla and the ships of the Channel Squadron. Two officers of the Royal Engineers are also there, to note the submarine mining operations on behalf of the War Office. For once, these experiments are being carried out without the attendance of foreign Naval Attachés, and the recent withdrawal of the Chinese sub-lieutenant from the Minotaur leaves the Channel Squadron without a foreign officer attached to it.

The appointment of Fleet Surgeon at the Dockyard at Sheerness, which has been held by Mr. Hoggan since May, 1877, will not become vacant until July, as the Admiralty has consented to his remaining at the yard until he retires, on completing his sixtieth year.

Major Alfred H. Pascoe, R.M.L.I., has been ordered to proceed to China as senior officer on the station, for the purpose of inspecting the Marine detachments on the station. At present there is no field-officer of Marines in China to take the command, should anything arise to call for a landing and combination of the small detachments from the numerous ships, and as British interests may require this step, in the event of the expected war between Russia and China, it has been decided to add a field-officer of Marines to the Naval force on the station.

We hear from Shanghai that the Chinese troops encamped at Foochow are having the benefit of a considerable amount of extra drill, being every day instructed in the use of the Nordenfelt guns, recently taken out by Lieutenant Sleeman, R.N.

By the survey of the Yangtsze, at the mouth of the Whangpoo river, by the officers of the Magpie, a navigable channel is reported to have been found south-east of Grass Island, which will connect the present north and south channels, and save about 15 miles to vessels running to and from the north.

The preparations for the launch of the Constance, on June 9, at Chatham Dockyard, are approaching completion. The Constance will be armed with two 90-cwt. and 12 64-pounder guns, and will have a crew of 251 officers and men, all told.

Admiral the Hon. Charles Elliot, C.B., returned to Devonport last Friday, when his flag was rehoisted.

The Emperor of Germany has conferred the Order Pour le Mérite, one of the highest distinctions in his gift, upon Professor Nordenskjöld, in recognition of his services in the cause of geographical discovery.

The mast of the Orpheus, from which the crew gave three parting cheers as it went by the board and they were cast into the boiling surf, was recently lying on the Manukau sands. The Admiralty would gain something in popularity by ordering this interesting relic to be brought home, to be set up as a memorial to the gallant officers and crew who so nobly died.

It is generally rumoured that Rear-Admiral Wadilove will shortly haul down his flag on board the Agincourt, as second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, and will be succeeded by Rear-Admiral H.S.H. the Prince of Leiningen.

The Admiralty is naturally very loth to place the names of all the officers of the Atalanta in the obituary notice at the end of the Navy List, and the June issue still gives the Atalanta as employed "on particular service." No details have yet been received from the master of the Scotia Queen, who is reported to have passed a raft, bolted and not lashed together, and a number of bodies of seamen in white jumpers. On touching at Queenstown he appears to have made this fact known in a casual kind of way, but on his arrival at Shields, Commander Jermain, of the Castor, will, in compliance with Admiralty directions, visit the Scotia Queen and obtain from her master all the particulars that can be gathered. There would seem to be little room for doubt that if this report be true, we have heard at last of some traces of the lost ship; and had the merchant skipper known that a reward of £200 was offered for such traces, he might have been the more inclined to take the trouble to identify the floating wreckage, or to have seen, by some of the men's clothing, to what ship they belonged. If the floating wreckage should have been a raft, and not a portion of the ship's deck, it is plain that the theories of the Atalanta having been suddenly capsized or pooped must be wrong, for a raft is not bolted together in a short space of time, and we can now only think of the ship as gradually settling down and her young crew with death staring them in the face. If such was the case, the loss of the ship is probably to be attributed to the heavy straining she must have experienced having opened out her seams, rendering it impossible, without the aid of steam-power, to keep down the water by means of the pumps. The matter of stability, weights, and rig will not, therefore, take so important a place in the coming inquiry into the state and condition of the ship, as the question of the wisdom of sending an old ship to cruise in stormy seas.

We regret to hear of the death, last Saturday, after a short illness, of Sub-Lieutenant Southwell, of the Northumberland; also of the death, by accident, of Sub-Lieutenant Philip Parsons, on the Retired List.

The Earl of Romney has resigned his commission as honorary lieutenant in the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers, and the vacancy has been filled by Sir Henry Peek, Bart., M.P.

Of the three deaths of officers reported to the Admiralty since April 20, Commander Bruce and Mr. Alexander Luard, midshipman, lost their lives on duty, one being drowned and the other killed by a fall from aloft. The third officer, Navigating Lieutenant Meade, died while at sea, when on passage home from China. The Atalanta's officers have, unhappily, to be added to this list of fatalities.

A volume of Addenda to the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions has, we hear, been ordered to be printed for issue to the Fleet.

The Mediterranean Fleet, including the Alexandra, Téméraire, Invincible, Rupert, and Thunderer, left Malta on Tuesday, June 1, for the cruise, the programme of which we gave last week.

The question of "Peace or War" is one that is occupying most thoughtful minds. The present state of the Balkan peninsula, of Russia, and of all the Continental Powers of Europe, with their bloated armaments, seems to render peace an impossibility for any length of time. In Germany it is urged that the only manner in which peace can be established on a sure and certain basis is once and for all to settle the Eastern Question. This settlement, it is maintained, will speedily be brought about by Russia, now that the non-interference of England is assured by Mr. Gladstone's accession to power. The coming struggle will see Austria advancing to Salonica, while giving up Trieste. German unity will be completed, and the House of Hapsburg will dominate over the Sclav race throughout the Balkan peninsula. So say the prophets.

The Jumna and Euphrates have been paid down, in order that their books might be reopened on June 1, for the ships to be placed on the new footing agreed upon between the Indian and Home Governments.

No news of importance has reached England this week from Afghanistan. Mollahs are still stirring up Momands in Komah. A force has been ordered to cross the river to attack them. The Lughman Governor has been driven from Tigri by insurgents. Sir F. Roberts returned with troops to Cabul on Saturday last, Brigadier Ross relieving him at Maidan. All is reported quiet in Candahar.

We believe the Authorities have some difficulty in filling up the appointments occasioned by the recent retirements and promotions of colonels and lieutenant-colonels of Artillery. The Deputy-Adjutant-General, with that desire to satisfy the officers of the Royal regiment which has ever been his characteristic, wishes, we understand, the now unemployed officers to choose their stations; but, unfortunately, the number of snug berths at home is unequal to the demand.

Colonel Sir George P. Colley, K.C.S.I., the newly-appointed High Commissioner to Natal, left England on the 28th ult., in the steamship Grantully Castle, for Natal. A telegram dated May 11 states that Major-General Sir H. H. Clifford has been sworn as Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, pending the arrival of Sir George Colley.

For active service and peace manœuvres, her Majesty has approved of caps as under:—For Staff: Blue cloth folding cap, 5 in. high, with scarlet cloth top, and blue side flaps 4 in. deep, to turn down when required. Gold French braid welts on cap and flaps, and at front and back seams. Field-Marshals will wear, as a badge, on the left side, the Royal crest, with crossed bâtons; Generals, the Royal crest, with sword and bâton crossed; other staff officers, the Royal crest alone. For Cavalry and Foot Guards: Cap, pattern as above; but wholly of blue cloth, with the following exceptions:—11th Hussars, crimson cloth; 12th Lancers and 15th Hussars, scarlet cloth. The regimental badge will be worn on the left side. For officers of Infantry regiments, exclusive of the Foot Guards and Rifles: Blue glengarry, pattern similar to that worn by non-commissioned officers and men, but not so deep, bound an inch wide with black silk riband, with riband ends $1\frac{3}{8}$ inch wide. Black silk cockade, on the left side. Numbers or badges to be worn on the cockade with a scarlet edging. Diced borders of regimental patterns, $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch wide, will be worn by officers of regiments in which the men wear diced borders. Royal regiments and the 104th Regiment will wear a scarlet tuft; Light Infantry, green; other regiments, blue. For Rifles: Cap to be of green cloth of special pattern, ornamented in front with a silver bugle, placed on a scarlet cord boss for the 60th Rifles, and on a black cord boss for the Rifle Brigade. Patterns of the above caps are deposited in the pattern-room at the Horse Guards, War Office, Pall Mall.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of a new pattern of forage-cap for officers of Infantry regiments, exclusive of the Foot Guards, Highland regiments wearing the kilt, and Rifles. The following is a description of the cap:—Blue cloth, green for Light Infantry, straight up, 3 in. high, with black patent leather, drooping peak, and chin straps. The peak ornamented with $\frac{1}{2}$-in., full, gold embroidery. Black netted button and braided figure on crown. The bands (except for regiments styled "Royal"), badges, and numbers are as laid down in the Dress Regulations, Edition of 1874. Regiments styled "Royal" and the 104th Regiment will wear scarlet bands $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. wide. Field-officers will have a gold French braid welt, instead of blue cloth, round the top of the cap. Officers of the 71st Regiment under the rank of field-officer will have a crimson cloth welt. Newly-appointed officers will provide themselves with forage caps of the above pattern; other officers as they may require to replace those now in possession.

It is proposed to offer eight commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry to candidates at the approaching examination for first appointments to the Army. Candidates must first obtain from the Military Secretary permission to compete at the examination, and should then inform the Secretary to the Admiralty of their desire for appointment to the Marines.

A report reaches us from Dublin that a Cavalry officer who had applied to go up for the entrance examination for the Staff College, to be held next week, has been refused permission to do so by the General commanding the district, though his request to present himself has already met with the approval of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. The excuse given is that the officer cannot be spared, and a correspondent, who signs himself "A Future Aspirant," says that the matter is being generally discussed in the Irish command, and it is felt that the officer is being subjected to most unfair treatment. It certainly is a matter for inquiry, for we cannot help thinking there must have been some mistake, and no time is to be lost in rectifying it if such is the case.

The first annual dinner of the Army Pay Department took place at the Criterion on the 24th ult. There were 23 members present, and Major Nicolls, as senior dining member, took the chair. The dinner proved a great success, and the thanks of the members were voted to Captain Routledge for his energy in getting up this first dinner of the Department. It is to be hoped that this will prove an impetus, and that henceforth the members of the Army Pay Department will look forward to meeting in larger numbers during the Derby week.

The distinguished-service reward, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General W. C. Hadden as colonel-commandant Royal Engineers, has been awarded to Lieutenant-General J. S. Hawkins, Royal Engineers. General Hawkins joined the Army, December 12, 1834. He has seen no war service.

There seems quite a fatality about the 5th Dragoon Guards, a regiment of which a correspondent speaks very highly in a letter which will be found in our regimental columns. For some years past the Horse Guards has found it necessary to fill troop after troop out of the ordinary groove. Altogether some dozen captains have been brought in over the heads of the subalterns, and now another troop has become vacant, by the death of Captain Lambert, and it would appear likely that the Authorities will again have to decide to bring in an outsider, seeing that the senior subaltern has not yet completed four and a half years' service.

With reference to the question of the bestowal of Distinguished-Service Rewards, a correspondent, one of the most deserving officers of the Army, writes:—"On what principle are these rewards given away? It is now eleven years since my name was placed on the Commander-in-Chief's list, and the noting of my name is beginning to take the appearance of a farce, for I have seen this coveted prize bestowed on men of much less service, and with claims which, if war services and testimonials go for anything, are not so deserving. Knowing, as I do, that his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge is ever ready to do what he can to meet the wishes of officers, I would suggest that before providing for new applicants, he may turn to the list and make provision for those who have been for years noted, and who naturally feel hurt at finding men provided for who in many instances were not even born when they entered the Service. It seems to me that the tendency is now-a-days to give everything to those who attend levées and make their wishes known; but it has to be borne in mind that there are many men like myself who were brought up under commanding officers of the old school, who always insisted that it was unsoldierlike to solicit anything, that if the military powers thought a man deserving they would reward him, and that an officer committed a grave military offence who tried to force his superiors into giving him anything. It seems to me that these men are now placed at a very serious disadvantage, and that they run a fair chance of never getting anything, unless those in power take circumstances into consideration." Now there is a good deal of truth in all this old soldier's complaint.

People are in the habit of referring to the 57th as a most fortunate regiment. Certainly it was fortunate in getting to the Cape in time to take part in most of the actions of the Zulu campaign, and it has been fortunate, too, as regards the strides made by its officers, since the abolition of Purchase; but we doubt much whether the subalterns consider themselves lucky at the present moment. The letter of a correspondent, appearing in our regimental columns, would seem to make out a case in favour of these officers who have lately passed through a trying campaign, and not unnaturally look for some reward, which might fairly be given, seeing how highly the conduct of all ranks of the gallant "Die Hards" was referred to on all hands in Zululand, where the presence of their seasoned soldiers did so much to steady the boy recruits which, unfortunately, predominated in the case of the regiments sent out from England.

The appointment of Major-General J. F. M. Browne, C.B., R.E., as Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, is a well-deserved acknowledgment of the services of a most distinguished officer, who, besides making a reputation for himself in the Crimea, where he was severely wounded, filled for several years the important post of Deputy-Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards, and earned during his tenure of office the respect of all ranks of his corps, the interests of which he did his best to promote.

As pointed out by us last week, Colonel North has come forward as the champion of the Purchase captains, and he intends, we understand, on an early date, to move "That a humble address be presented to her Majesty that she will be graciously pleased to take into her favourable consideration the case of the Purchase captains of the Cavalry and Infantry of the Army, and give orders for the suspension of action of the Royal Warrant affecting these officers, which directs that brevets shall cease on the 1st October, 1880, except for distinguished service in the field." In view of the motion, we should advise those officers interested in the subject to make known their views to the Colonel, who, we feel certain, will be only too pleased to receive any suggestions.

The verdict of all military men present at the trooping of the colours on Saturday last, at the Horse Guards, was that the parade, taking all things into consideration, was a success. The marching was not up to the standard of former years, and more than one of the Staff officers in attendance found it necessary to express, in very audible tones, astonishment at certain things which were done and left undone—of mistakes which could not have occurred in the old days, when the Army was an Army and not a training-school. But we must not look for perfection in these degenerate days, but try and be as satisfied as we can with matters as they are, bad though they be, unquestionably.

The step of placing on half-pay, or compulsorily causing to retire from the Service on an annuity, the whole of the lieutenant-colonels of the Royal Artillery who have served for five years and more in that rank, is, we believe, under contemplation. Following closely similar action with regard to officers in the same position belonging to other branches of the Service, no surprise can be felt. Forced retirements, no doubt, press heavily, and often with seeming injustice, upon individuals; but the stagnation in promotion in the Royal Artillery has become so excessive, that unless some step of the kind is had recourse to, the old state of things of some thirty years back, when the field-officers and many of the captains of this regiment were worn-out, old men, must inevitably recur. Those lieutenant-colonels of Cavalry and Infantry who were not affected by the Royal Warrant, which compels retirement after five years' command of a regiment, are now on the eve of being removed from their commands; and so long as officers of that rank in the Artillery, similarly situated as regards having exceeded five years' service in it, can be shown to be on the same footing, and as having enjoyed the same privileges appertaining to their rank as the former, they can have no special ground for complaint. If, however, we consider their respective positions in relation one to the other, we find that a very considerable difference does exist. From the day that an officer is promoted to the command of a Cavalry or Infantry regiment, he really becomes a commanding officer, and draws command pay; a lieutenant-colonel of Artillery, on the other hand, may have to wait from two to three years before he succeeds to the latter, and still longer before he attains to the position of a commanding officer, for the regiment is so overflooded with officers of this rank, that two, and sometimes three, are found at stations where there are not more than the same number of batteries, a state of things which borders on the ludicrous. When at length time or chance makes him the senior of his grade, he then only secures a position very little superior to that of a major in other branches of the Service, as he is closely controlled by the regimental full colonel commanding the Artillery in the district, and, in addition, is subject to an inspection by an inspector-general, a useless and costly anomaly in this regiment which we hope shortly to see abolished, and also to the reports consequent on it. Till the rank of full regimental colonel finally disappears from the Army List, till the number of lieutenant-colonels is reduced at least by half, and till finally the Artillery is, as it most inevitably will be, split up into regiments, it will be as impossible to arbitrate for it, or to place it on the same footing as far as command is concerned, with the rest of the Army, as it has been proved to be to apply short service to a nation, when general service is not obligatory. It would, on the contrary, not only be practicable, but merely an act of ordinary justice to place these lieutenant-colonels on an equality with those of the rest of the Service as regards pay, either by giving them command pay from the date of their accession to the rank, paying all arrears to those obliged to retire for the time they did not draw it, or, as an alternative, by counting their five years for retirement only from the date of their commencing to receive this command pay. All the steps that of late years have been taken to quicken the promotion in the Artillery have been totally without effect,—a short time back utter stagnation existed in the subaltern ranks; now, owing to the number of captains having been nearly doubled, lieutenants are being promoted within a reasonable time, while there is apparently not the slightest prospect of the last half of the former ever attaining to a higher grade. The evil, therefore, has only been transferred from one rank to another, and in all probability a large number of captains will be compelled to retire, on attaining their twentieth year of service, in a comparatively short time. As it is important, for many reasons, to avoid driving into forced idleness a number of men who have hardly reached middle-age, and whose best years are before them, the only way of grasping the horns of the dilemma is to clear the way by compelling senior officers to retire; but while obliging them to take this step, all appearance of injustice should be avoided, and at least, as far as pay is concerned, the lieutenant-colonels of Artillery should not be treated otherwise than with the justice meted out to their equals in the other branches of the Service.

CHILI AND PERU.

The Chilians are taking to heart the want of enterprise shown by their Navy, and the Pueblo Chileno thus speaks of the affair between the Union and Huascar:—"On the receipt of the telegram announcing that the blockade of Arica had been run by the Peruvian vessel, and that she escaped with impunity, we doubted the news as it was then made apparent to us, and we abstained from making any comments on the subject. Probably, we thought, in the concise style of the despatch, some item, some detail, some special incident has been omitted that may alter the facts as stated. We awaited details. Details were received by the Santa Rosa, and, painful to state, better for us had we remained ignorant of them. We shall be frank, although this frankness may wound our amour-propre; but truth is always wholesome, however painful it may be. The adventure of the Union is a fact of which we ought to be ashamed. And we do not perceive how the parties who took part in the engagement can ever justify their conduct. It is a wonder that the Union ever dared to leave Callao to ply the seas which our ships dominate, being, as we are, masters of the sea, and possessing a relatively powerful navy, and being able to cruise along the enemy's coast from one end of it to the other. It was indeed a bold venture that, the Huascar being on the blockade of Arica, the Peruvian ship, protected by the darkness of the night, ever attempted to ignore the blockade, and did it most successfully. But that, finding herself in the lion's mouth, as it were,—that is, in Arica,—with her retreat obstructed by three of our ships, she could have escaped in plain daylight, and have mocked her enemies, is an unheard-of exploit. What excuse do our sailors give?—'That the Cochrane, believing the Union to be seriously damaged by the explosion of two shells on her deck, called the Huascar to a council, and together with the Amazonas, which had remained outside the port during the engagement, took up a position at a distance of fourteen miles off!' Was it believed that the ship had been disabled by the explosion of the shell on her deck? And was it found necessary to meet in council in order to determine what should be done with a vessel that was believed to be disabled? And lastly, was it deemed indispensable (for the reason, no doubt, that the enemy might not overhear the discussion) to abandon the port and station themselves fourteen miles off, for the purpose of having a consultation? Would it not have been more prudent, under the circumstances, to have selected Antofagasta as the place of rendezvous? This scarcely needs comment! What an unfortunate moment this has been for sailors so gallant as those who took part in the engagement, seamen who have given abundant proofs of their valour, ability, boldness, and heroism! We cannot account for it, and we are anxious to read the official despatch. Perhaps some plausible explanation of what has happened may therein be given. Meanwhile, the adventure of the Union is a worse blow to us than a real and effective disaster." According to intelligence published in Buenos Ayres, the Chilian fleet continued to bombard Callao on May 7, and serious damage was being done to the docks and town by its fire, the Chilian vessels being beyond the range of the Peruvian batteries. The inhabitants were fleeing to Lima, where great excitement prevailed. It is added that riots have occurred at Lima, in consequence of the high price of food, which had been fixed by law. The Chilian army had arrived near Tacna, the allied Bolivian and Peruvian troops being concentrated six miles off in the village of Calana. The Chilian troops endured great privations and experienced much difficulty while crossing the mountains and passing through the desert with their artillery. After a short rest, the Chilians attacked and captured Tacna, defeating the whole Peruvian army, and then proceeded to march on Arica. An "occasional correspondent" of the Western Morning News writes to that paper that on Sunday, April 4, the Peruvian man-of-war Oroya visited Tocopilla, much to the consternation of its inhabitants, who did not expect such delicate attention at a time when Chili has obtained undisputed mastery over the sea. No damage was done, however, the Peruvian leaving without firing a shot.

SOME MAGAZINES.

The June number of Time, Edmund Yates's monthly miscellany of interesting and amusing literature, is quite up to the average. The "contents" list shows sixteen articles, contributed by well-known authors, several of which are cleverly illustrated. The number opens with an amusing account, given by a "Representative Statesman," of how he became a Cabinet Minister. Then follow the first chapters of a serial by Mrs. Newman, quaintly entitled, "With Costs;" a few lines, written by Paul Ward, treat of Miss Genevieve Ward and Madame Modjeska, who have recently created such a sensation in the theatrical world. Violet Fane continues the curious adventures of a savage; and an anonymous writer opens our eyes to one of the most prevalent and iniquitous phases of modern crime—"Loan-Office Swindles." Altogether, Time for June is excellent reading.

There is not much to observe in Blackwood for June. "The New Ministry" and "Conservative Reorganisation" will satisfy the requirements of political readers; while those who prefer miscellaneous matters may study the science of "Suicide," take a lesson in the art of "Fishing," or enjoy a glimpse of "Bush-life in Queensland."

So many questions regarding Ireland are at present on the tapis, that more than usual interest is imparted to the University Magazine. We can recommend for perusal a landlord's opinion as to the existence of agitation in Ireland. It is a paper prepared with considerable care, and one which evidences the writer's thorough knowledge of his subject; while at the same time, remembering that it is from the pen of a landlord anxious to protect the interests of landlords, it shows no violent bias. There are several other interesting articles in the University.

The centenary of the Naval and Military Bible Society (which was established A.D. 1780) was recently celebrated by a public meeting at 32 Sackville Street, Piccadilly. Amongst those present were Capt. the Hon. F. Maude (in the chair), Admiral Fishbourne, Admiral Sir Claude Buckle, Gen. Copland-Crawford, R.A., Gen. M'Cleverty, Major Cooper-Gardiner, and the Rev. R. C. Halpin, Chaplain to the Guards. The report, read by Admiral Fishbourne, drew particular attention to the fact that the institution had been before the public for 100 years, doing the very highest work. The committee began the past year with a balance of £121 13s. 7d. The receipts from all sources, including £118 5s. 8d. from dividends, £50 from a bequest, and £360 5s. 2d. from the sale of bibles and testaments at reduced prices, amounted to £1,046 6s. 9d. The purchase of bibles, testaments, and portions of the New Testament, with the expense of carriage, &c., had cost £963 6s. 8d. The working expenditure amounted to £343 13s. 10d., and a balance was left in the hands of the treasurer of £92 9s. The total issue of bibles and testaments was as follows:—viz., bibles, 9,598; testaments, 432. The committee had also issued 13,264 portions of the New Testament, Psalms, &c., as free grants. The total number of books sold was—bibles, 6,255; testaments, 2,637. The free grants during the year, including 2,700 bibles to her Majesty's training-ships, for which the Admiralty gave half the cost price as a donation, amounted to 3,343 bibles and 1,675 testaments.

INDIA.

The honorary colonelcy of the Bombay Volunteer Rifle Corps has been declined by Sir James Fergusson.

Major R. Westmacott, Bombay S.C., general transport officer at Quetta, has been appointed road commandant, in the place of the late Major S. G. Waudby, Bombay S.C.

Col. C. S. Palin (Bombay S.C.) has been appointed to the command of the Deesa Brigade.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Maude, V.C., K.C.B., commanding the Rawul Pindee Division, has with his staff gone to Murree for the hot season.

Three new Guide Corps are to be raised immediately for service in Afghanistan.

According to the Indian Daily News a circular has been issued from the Adjutant-General's Office at Simla to all commanding officers of native regiments in Bengal. This circular will be repeated by the Adjutant-Generals of the armies of the Coast Presidencies. In it Gen. Greaves directs that all regiments that have proceeded on service, or that may have been warned for service, are to call in their pensioned men. As many of these as may be willing to re-engage, and who may be found physically capable of service beyond the frontier, and who may be under the limit of forty years of age, may be re-engaged, for as long as the regiment may be on service, or for a period not exceeding three years. Each sepoy rejoining the ranks under this order will receive 30 rs. as kit-money; annual half-mounting allowance, 4 rs.; his effective pay, and the good-conduct pay he might have been drawing when he was pensioned.

The Indian papers contain a long memorandum by Sir P. Haines on the report of the Army Commission, which will, says the Calcutta paper, go far to restore the public confidence in the ability and professional eminence of the Commander-in-Chief. His Excellency declares himself to be opposed to most of the general principles advocated in the report, and especially to the proposed mode of dealing with the Madras Army, which he considers the great reserve of India. He affirms that if every existing cadre were completed to the war strength suggested, there would not be a man too many, and he does not anticipate the possibility of safely reducing the number of regiments. His Excellency points out that the increase in the cost of the Army in the last ten years only amounts to £193,000, which sum astonishes by its smallness, and he deprecates further savings being sought for in a reduction of commands staffs.

Referring to the report that the Horse Guards have protested against the rank of lieut.-gen. being conferred on Sir F. Roberts, in contravention of orders, such rank only being given after Royal sanction and approval, a contemporary says :—"On Nov. 11 last the Governor-General in Council, by a special order, conferred on Major-Gen. Sir F. S. Roberts the local rank of lieut.-gen. The reason at the time was presumed to be that public inconvenience was caused by the commands of Major-Gens. Roberts and Bright being independent of each other. One head was wanted, and the Viceroy did not wish Gen. Bright to be that head, to which position he had a first claim, as he was senior as a major-gen. to Roberts. It was also understood that the Viceroy opposed another solution of the difficulty, which was that proposed by Gen. Sir F. Haines, that he himself should assume the command. The Viceroy, therefore, conferred local superior rank on Gen. Roberts, and his power to do so is disputed by the Horse Guards. An important principle is involved, as, if the Viceroy has power to confer local rank in India, he can, at his discretion or indiscretion, supersede any officer appointed by her Majesty at home."

On the recommendation of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Government of Madras have ruled that the men of European extraction are not to be enlisted in native regiment bands. His Excellency is of opinion that Eurasians are better suited to lead the life of drummers and fifers than Europeans are, and their enlistment in native corps will give employment to many poor Eurasians.

The following appointments have been made on the personal staff of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay :—Lieut.-Col. H. H. D. Stracey, Scots Guards, to be military secretary; Lieut. A. W. T. Radcliffe, B.S.C., to be an aide-de-camp; 2nd Lieut. A. C. Christopher, 78th Foot, to be an aide-de-camp; Lieut D'Arcy Chapman, 29th Foot, to be an extra aide-de-camp; Surg. G. Waters, to be medical officer.

Col. (Brigadier-General) G. R. S. Burrows, Bombay Infantry (commanding a brigade on service in Southern Afghanistan), has been appointed to the brigade staff of the Bombay Army in succession to Major-Gen. R. Phayre, C.B., Bombay S.C., who vacated on promotion. Gen. Burrows remains in his present command, Brigadier-Gen. Little continuing to officiate for him at Nusseerabad.

Capt. H. Melliss, Bombay S.C., officiating D.A.Q.M.G., has been appointed an officiating A.Q.M.G. of Division, Bombay, vice Major Adam, proceeded on service.

Major-Gen. J. Hills, V.C., C.B., R.A., late Military Governor of Cabul, has been appointed to the command of the Kandahar Division, Afghanistan.

A deputation of the members of the Indian Medical Service waited upon Lord Hartington on Wednesday, at the India Office, and presented a memorial pointing out the inequalities existing between that and the British Medical Service. Owing to the orders of the Indian Government, the service had deteriorated. It had been practically divided into civil and military branches, and the latter was subordinated to the Army Medical Department. Lord Hartington, replying, said he was sure neither the Indian nor Home Governments desired to do anything that would lower the status of the Service. He heard most of the grievances for the first time, and admittedly a reorganisation of the Service was necessary.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.

The ceremony of trooping the colours was carried out on Saturday on the Horse Guards' parade. About half-past ten, "God save the Queen" announced the approach of royalty. With the Duke of Cambridge on his right, the Duke of Connaught and the Prince of Hesse behind him, the Prince of Wales rode on to the ground. The German, Austrian, Turkish, and Belgian attachés were present. The Prince of Wales wore the uniform of the Honourable Artillery Company, the Duke of Cambridge that of the Grenadier Guards, and the Duke of Connaught that of the Rifle Brigade. Meanwhile, the representatives of the five battalions of the Guards, stationed in London, wheeled into line, each battalion having furnished some sixty files. After halting at the saluting-point, the Prince and his staff rode to the southern end of the line, passed up, turned, and rode along the rear, after which inspection they gathered in front of the Horse Guards. The usual ceremonies took place, and after a salute, the colours were borne along the front of the line, which presented arms, whilst the escort kept an equal pace in rear. The whole line wheeled into column of companies, and twice passed the saluting-point, the troop of cavalry bringing up the rear. The royal party left the ground shortly after eleven.

A review of all the available troops in garrison, in honour of the Queen's Birthday, took place in the Queen's Park, Edinburgh, on Saturday last, in presence of the Lord High Commissioner and the Countess of Rosslyn. At eleven o'clock the troops marched on to the parade-ground from their respective barracks, and took up a position in line facing Huggis Knowe. All branches of the Service were represented. The 21st Hussars occupied a position on the extreme west of the parade-ground; the depôt battery of the 4th Brig. R.A., with muzzle-loading field-guns, being drawn up next the cavalry, the 71st Highlanders, from Edinburgh Castle, under the command of Col. Lambton, being a short distance behind the Artillery; and the Edinburgh Artillery Militia, commanded by Major Carter, occupying the ground on the extreme east. In this order the troops presented a magnificent appearance under the favourable weather auspices that fortunately prevailed. Shortly before twelve, Major-Gen. Hope, commanding the troops in Scotland, rode on to the ground, accompanied by Col. Ingilby, commanding the Royal Artillery in Scotland; Col. Buller, V.C., C.B., C.M.G., A.A.G.; Capt. Salmond, D.A.A.G.; Major Harvey, 71st Highlanders; and Capt. de Lancey, A.D.C. Precisely at twelve a Royal salute was fired from the Half-Moon Battery at the Castle, the first gun of which was the signal for commencement of firing in the Park. The Artillery led off, and between each seven guns the Infantry fired a feu-de-joie, while the bands played a bar of the National Anthem. The troops afterwards marched past, which was performed with great steadiness. A very interesting field-day then took place. His Grace the Lord High Commissioner, accompanied by Sir Arthur Halkett, Lord Brooke, Col. Thompson, Capt. Bailey, and Capt. Ellis, 6th Inniskillings, was present during the whole of the manœuvres, with the Countess of Rosslyn.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards. The Central News states that Jordan, the captain of the Canadian Cricket Club, which played the Leicestershire team on Wednesday, was apprehended in the evening on the charge of deserting, eight years ago, from the Blues. His right name is Thomas Dale, and he is said, since his desertion, to have visited and settled in Canada, married twice, had six children, and become a renowned cricketer, and captain of three influential Canadian clubs.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. The depôt will remain at Colchester until the winter, attached to the 3rd Hussars.

5th Dragoon Guards. Capt. J. O. Lambert died at Park Hill House, Torquay, on the 31st ult., aged 30 years. The deceased entered the Army Dec. 30, 1871, and became capt. Sept. 23, 1877. A Cavalry officer who has lately visited Aldershot informs us, that having witnessed a full-dress parade of the "Green Horse," he can pronounce everything to have been perfection itself. "And in quarters," he writes, "things are as well ordered as they are in the field and on parade. I went down to see my old regiment, which I expected and hoped to find carrying off the palm, but I soon found out how far in advance of it the 5th stand. In fact I may safely say that, even in the days of long service, I never saw a regiment look better or drill with more perfect precision, and great credit is due to Col. Marsland and his officers."

4th Hussars. It is now thought probable that the regiment will go to Aldershot at the end of the month, but we should imagine the authorities would think twice before sending it to the station in its present state,—with its ranks full of young soldiers, who want pulling together before taking part in the rough work of an Aldershot drill season. A wiser step would be to order it to Aldershot in August, when it could go straight into barracks, and enjoy a few months' steady drilling, before taking its place alongside regiments which have spent several years in England.

5th Lancers. It seems to be doubtful now, again, whether the regiment will take part in the summer drills at Aldershot.

6th Dragoons. The regiment has arrived at Norwich from Edinburgh.

18th Hussars. There is a report that the regiment will, after all, not go to Aldershot this season.

19th Hussars. The following very handsome and well-deserved tribute has been paid by Major Barrow, to the services rendered by the Natal Guides during the latter stages of the Zulu war:—"Assistant-Adjutant-General, 1st Division: With reference to my report of yesterday, as the Volunteer Guides are about to leave my command and return to Natal, I have the honour to bring to the notice of the Major-General commanding the valuable services rendered by this corps. The corps was formed before the relief of Etshowe, and is composed for the most part of men of the Stanger and Isipingo Mounted Rifles, and made up by a few volunteers from each of the other Volunteer corps in Natal. Throughout the whole of the advanced work done by the mounted troops of the 1st division, the Volunteer Guides have always led the way; well mounted, well equipped, always ready for work, they have rendered invaluable service. Indeed, I cannot speak too highly of the service these Guides have been to the mounted force under my command. Nearly all the members of this corps live in the colony of Natal, and I hope that the services they have rendered will receive due recognition. I would specially bring to notice the name of Capt. Addison, commanding the corps, who has not only commanded the corps with ability, but has rendered very excellent service by his advice and sound judgment on many occasions. As my staff officer, Lieut. Courtenay, 20th Hussars, has been invalided, and will be unable to join me again in the field, I trust I may take this opportunity of bringing his name to favourable notice. He has acted with much tact, zeal, and energy, and rendered very good service as my staff officer from Nov. 1878 to May, 1879.—(Signed), P. H. S. Barrow, Major, commanding mounted troops, 1st Division, July 19, 1879, Umlatoosi Camp." "I cannot express too highly my sense of the valuable services performed by Major Barrow and the mounted force under his command since I assumed command of the division in April, and I am aware of the high opinion Lord Chelmsford had of him and them before, and the good work done by the force at Etshowe and Ginginhlovo. Capt. Rawlins, 90th Light Infantry, in command of the Mounted Infantry, and Capt. Lord Gifford; Lieut. Courtenay, 20th Hussars, staff officer; Capt. Addison, the Guides, and his fine body of men, are Volunteers who have done excellent work. They all have well earned my warmest thanks.—(Signed), W. Hope Crealock, Major-General."

20th Hussars. Lieut. Courtenay has received special mention in Major Barrow's despatch, for his services as Staff officer of the Natal Guides in the Zulu campaign. Vide 19th Hussars.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Brevet Col. F. Close, late superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factories, Waltham Abbey, has been appointed a member of the Committee on Ordnance at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, in succession to Col. E. Maitland, R.A., appointed superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich.

"A Garrison Gunner" writes:—"It seems to me that the branch of the Royal Artillery that would most profit from separation would be the Garrison Artillery, for I cannot but look upon the manner in which it is now officered as most lamentable. At home, it has, practically, no subalterns; two are nominally allowed, but when are they forthcoming? Lucky the battery that has one, and that one is generally just out of the Academy, and eagerly looking forward to the day when he may be moved into a field battery. One of the consequences of this state of things is that there is no generation of junior officers growing up to supply the stock of seniors, so that as vacancies occur amongst the captains and majors they have to be filled by men who, having spent years with the Field and Horse, bring neither experience nor liking to the Garrison. You will undoubtedly find a sprinkling of good garrison artillerymen amongst the majors and captains, but the great majority are serving against their inclination, and this feeling is much increased by the before-mentioned lack of subalterns, which entails on them the performance of the subalterns' duties, in addition to their own. And now, turning from the officers to the men, I imagine it would be difficult to find a body of men more ignorant of the work they should know than are garrison gunners, as a rule, of gunnery. Not that the fault is theirs. The fault lies in the system, that leaves them utterly under-officered, and takes them for every duty rather than their own. When can a major get his battery together, either for instruction or gun-drill? He may see them doubling past (probably to the amusement of the spectators and his own shame and confusion, from the manner the manœuvre is performed); but as to getting his employed men, once a week even, for gun-drill, such a thing is not to be heard of. No, never will the Garrison Artillery be what it should be—be as good of its kind as are the Horse and Field—till the men are placed more at the disposal of the battery officers, and the battery officers have learned to look upon that branch of the Service as their home."

Major H. L. Ellaby, 7th Brig., arrived home from Mauritius on the 29th ult., in the Australian cutter Sobraon, on leave of absence, after a long tour of foreign service. It was Major Ellaby who proceeded to the Cape from St. Helena in command of the troops conveyed by Capt. Bradshaw in H.M.S. Shah, on the news reaching of the disaster at Isandlwana. He subsequently served through the Zulu campaign, attached to Gen. Crealock's column, and lately proceeded in command of his battery to Mauritius.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut. R. C. Hart, V.C., is at present attached to the staff of Major-Gen. J. B. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., at Aldershot, preparatory to competing for the forthcoming examination for entrance to the Staff College.

The special correspondent of the Standard telegraphs from Bombay:—"Col. Gordon, who has resigned his post as private secretary to the Viceroy, has addressed the following explanation the Times of India:—'Sir,—Men at times, owing to the mysteries of Providence, form judgments which they afterwards repent of. This is my case, in accepting the appointment which the Marquess of Ripon honoured me in offeringme. I repented my act as soon as I had accepted the appointment, and deeply regret that I had not the moral courage to say so at that time. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness or the consideration with which Lord Ripon has treated me. I have never met any one with whom I could have felt greater sympathy in the arduous task he has undertaken. God has blessed India and England in giving Lord Ripon the Viceroyalty. He will succeed, in spite of all obstacles, for God is with him, and who shall stand against Him? I might have gone up to Simla, and might have quietly pleaded all sorts of excuses for my return, but that would have been false and unfair to Lord Ripon. I have preferred to state at once publicly what I have done, and to take the entire blame, which I richly deserve, on myself; and to my critics I reply by the question, "Have they never themselves realised what it is to have made a mistake? If so, let them cast the first stone." Depend on it, that this vast country will find, in spite of all obstacles, great as they may be, that the rule of Lord Ripon will be blessed, for he will rule in the strength of the Lord, and not of man.—C. E. Gordon.—Government House, Bombay, June 3.' The resignation has caused great surprise."

12th Regiment. The funeral of Lieut. W. F. Percival, 1st Batn., took place at Portsmouth, with military honours, on Monday afternoon. The deceased was 27 years of age, and had been four years in the Service. He accompanied the 1st Batn. to India three years ago, and was ordered to the Afghan campaign later on. He came home from Afghanistan on 12 months' sick-leave, and died at the India Arms Hotel, Gosport, on the 27th ult. On Saturday the body was conveyed to the Military Hospital at Portsea in a private carriage, to await interment. On Monday afternoon the funeral party was formed in the Anglesea Barracks, and consisted of 40 rank and file as a firing-party, with one serjeant and one corporal, under the command of Lieut. Blunt. The whole of the 2nd Batn., comprising 120 privates, 15 serjeants, and all the officers, formed part of the procession, which was under the command of Col. Bagnell. Besides the band of the regiment, under Mr. G. W. Clarke, the bands of the Royal Marine Artillery and 108th Regt. were present. The deceased followed to the grave by his father, Gen. Percival.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Matterson, 1st Batn., has been granted leave of absence pending his appointment as adjutant of the 26th Middlesex R.V.C.

23rd Fusiliers. Major and Brevet Col. O'Connor, V.C., succeeds to a regimental lieutenant-colonelcy of the 1st Batn., on the retirement of Col. Prevost, and exchanges with Col. Elgee, of the 2nd Batn. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Tupper proceeds to Wrexham as major of the brigade depôt, vice Col. Elgee.

28th Regiment. Capt. Wilford is about to be appointed to the adjutancy of the North Mayo Militia. Capt. Hinde is about to effect an exchange into the 34th Regt.

32nd Light Infantry. Mr. M. W. Lister, late of the regiment, died at Rouen on the 29th ult., aged 35 years.

47th Regiment. The Irish Times says:—"Capt. Cooper has resigned his appointment as Vice-Consul in Asia Minor, and returned home on leave of absence until the 28th inst., when he will rejoin at the Curragh for duty."

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. S. T. Collins, R.M.L.I., having attained the age for compulsory retirement, has been placed on the Retired List from the 30th ult. Lieut. R. W. Heathcote, R.M.L.I. will be promoted in the vacancy caused by the above retirement.

57th Regiment. "An Old Die-Hard" writes:—"I wish as an old friend of the regiment, to point out to you a few points which I think I am at liberty to term 'hard lines' concerning promotion in the regiment. Capt. Lord Gifford, V.C., who, you know, is to be employed by the Colonial Office, has only done six weeks' regimental duty in the last 21 months, and those were six weeks in Zululand, which proved to be a mere stepping-stone from one staff employment to another. He has now been uninterruptedly away from the regiment for 12 months, and there are yet no signs or sounds of his papers going in or of his being seconded. Capt. Collins's case is very similar; he has now been away from the regiment uninterruptedly for 14 months, firstly on sick-leave, which was extended in order that he might evade the English winter by going to the South of France. This was, however, thrown up to accept the appointment as equerry to H.R.H. Princess Louise in Canada, with whom he proceeded there. Why is not the command step, vacant by Col. C. M. Clarke retiring on half-pay to accept a reward, gained doubtless for his services in the Zulu war, at once gazetted, and the step given throughout the regiment? At present Col. Clarke is the only 57th man who has got anything by the war, and everyone knows highly the regiment was spoken of throughout the campaign."

77th Regiment. Capt. Jervis-White has joined the depôt at Hounslow for two years, relieving Capt. Tickell.

80th Regiment. H.M.S. Orontes landed the regiment at Kingstown lately on its return from the Cape, after a foreign service of eight years. The regiment, which is now quartered in the Richmond Barracks, Dublin, is nearly 800 strong, and their bronzed faces, white helmets, clothes soiled by many a long march, and the swinging pace at which they marched through the city to their quarters excited general notice. We hear that they have better clothes in their valises, and though their present coats look eminently workmanlike, still it will be well for the colonel—who has the reputation of not caring much for appearances—to remember that his regiment is not now in the wilds of Africa, but in a civilised metropolis. The depôt, under command of Brevet Major Stone, has now joined head-quarters, and for the first time for eight years the whole regiment is together. The 80th left England in January, 1872, and served at Singapore, with detachments at Penang and Malacca, until August, when they relieved the 10th Regt. at Hong Kong. During the time of their service in the Malay peninsula, the regiment, under command of Lieut.-Col. Smith, was instrumental in repressing a serious outbreak of the large and turbulent Chinese population of Singapore, and owing to the firmness of the colonel and the excellent disposition of the troops, the rising was suppressed without bloodshed, for which service the regiment was thanked by the Governor, Sir H. Ord. After serving for three years at Hong Kong, during which period the men enjoyed excellent health, notwithstanding the evil reputation which Hong Kong bears as a station, three companies, under command of Lieut.-Col. Amiel, were ordered, in November, 1875, to the Straits, in consequence of the disturbed state of the country, and the murder of the British Resident, Mr. Birch, at Passir Sala. These companies formed part of the occupying force, and the important military command and the duties of commissioner at the capital, Kinta, were entrusted to Major Tyler; while Capt. Howard was left at Banda Bahru, lower down the river, to protect the line of communication, and to provision the more advanced posts. At the latter station, Capt. Howard, with Lieuts. Swinburne and Hast, in concert with the commissioner, effected the arrest of Sultan Abdoolah and his advisers, without creating any disturbance, for which they received the warm commendation of the General commanding. Upon Lieut. Johnson devolved the responsible duty of conveying a party of political prisoners to Singapore, which he performed with tact and judgment. For their services, Major Amiel received a brevet lieutenant-colonelcy, and Capt. Huskisson, who was brigade-major to Sir F. Colborne, K.C.B., a brevet majority, and the men and officers the India war medal with clasp for Perak. The remainder of the regiment followed these three companies to Singapore, on being relieved by the 28th Regt., and on March 8, 1877, the whole regiment was ordered to the Cape, and stationed at King William's Town. In August, 1877, the 80th went to Natal, the head-quarters remaining at Pietermaritzburg, while a detachment under Brevet Major Tucker was posted at Utrecht, Transvaal, in consequence of the threatening attitude of the Zulus. In command of this force, which eventually developed into the flying column which Sir E. Wood afterwards commanded with such signal success, Major Tucker performed most valuable service, by keeping the authorities informed of what was going on over the border, and in conducting diplomatic business with the Zulus and Boers with tact and success, and for which he has been repeatedly thanked by both Gen. Pearson and Sir Theophilus Shepstone. The regiment has been well represented in all the recent events in South Africa, and has marched and counter-marched over Natal, Transvaal, and Zululand continuously for about two years. It was while commanding guns served by men of the 80th Regt. at Kambula, and which guns had been equipped and for some time commanded by Lieut. Hast, that Lieut. Nicholson, R.A., was killed; and at Isandlwana the regiment lost several men who were serving in the Mounted Infantry, among others Serjt. Johnson, the mess-serjeant, and it was during the disastrous retreat that Pte. Wassel, of the 80th, gained the V.C., for performing a distinguished act of gallantry. Prior to the events in Zululand, four companies, under command of Major Tucker, were at Fort Weeber and other fortified posts in and around the mountains forming Secocoeni's stronghold, and took part in Col. Rowland's demonstration against that chieftain; and two companies, under Capt. Howard, were with the force under command of Major Bushman, 9th Lancers (to whom Lieut. Lyons acted as galloper), and the contingent of Swazies under Capt. Macleod, C.M.G., and took part in the successful attack upon Secocoeni's fortified caves. The regiment was at Ulundi, under command of Lieut.-Col. Tucker, Capt. Anderson being second-in-command and Capt. Sherrard acting as adjutant; and their steadiness on the morning of July 4, when they were leading the advance, and in the square during the action, was especially commended by Lord Chelmsford, Gen. Sir E. Wood, and Col. Buller. The regiment met with one sad disaster, at the Intombi River, where a whole company, detached to guard waggons, detained by the sudden rising of the river, were destroyed almost to a man by a sudden and overwhelming attack of Zulus. Capt. Moriarty was killed, while doing his best to rally his men; and also Dr. Cobbyn, in medical charge of the regiment, and who had become a great favourite with officers and men, from his unvarying kindness. It is too late now to inquire how far this catastrophe might have been avoided by precautions and a better waggon laager, but it is satisfactory to the corps that the gallant behaviour of Colour-Serjt. Booth, who by an unfortunate occurrence, now happily forgotten, found himself in command of the survivors, and succeeded in bringing them in safety to Luneburg, has been recognised and rewarded by the V.C. Capt. Prior was not serving with his regiment in Zululand, but with the Frontier Light Horse (under Col. Buller, C.B.), and for his services with this corps, and a lucky shot, by which he killed Umbeline, he has received a brevet majority. The head-quarters during the time Lieut.-Col. Tucker was in Zululand were under command of Major Tyler, who by his recent retirement has deprived the Service of a first-rate officer; and it is chiefly to him, and the judicious precautions which he took at Pretoria during the time the Boers were assembled, armed, to the number of 5,000, that the meeting dispersed without committing any acts of violence. In this he was ably seconded by Capt. Saunders and Capt. Howard, commanding at Middelburg, the centre of Boer disaffection, and a station of the utmost importance, as being the depôt from which Lydenburg, Fort Weeber, and Luneburg were chiefly victualled; and it was in consequence of Capt. Howard's extreme usefulness and energy in his capacity of a Commissariat officer at this important base that the General commanding positively refused to allow him to join the regiment in Zululand, though frequently applied for by his colonel, where he would have been second-in-command. Capts. Johnson and Sherrard formed part of a flying column sent after Cetewayo, during which service they experienced considerable hardships, and though unsuccessful in their object, were quite as near securing the person of the Zulu King as ever Lord Gifford was. In December, the whole of the regiment concentrated at Pretoria, and left on Dec. 25 for Cape Town, viâ the Diamond Fields; but when at Klarksdorf, 34 miles beyond Potchefstroom, they were stopped to aid the civil power in the arrest of Mr. Pretorius, the ex-President of the Transvaal Republic. Col. Tucker took 50 men with him, and a proportion of officers, and moved them in mule waggons by night rapidly back to Potchefstroom, and the arrest was effected quietly; and the tact and conciliatory manner with which Mr. Pretorius was treated by the colonel drew from that gentleman his warmest thanks, and averted a disturbance which the highly injudicious conduct of the Landrost, and the want alike of firmness and courtesy shown by him and his advisers, threatened to bring about, as the Boers in considerable numbers, well armed, and under the command of Mr. Paul Krieger, were outside Potchefstroom, and in a most excited state. For this Col. Tucker received the thanks of Sir G. Wolseley. The regiment subsequently marched to Durban, viâ Heidelburg, the proposed route by Kimberley having been found to be impossible, for want of water. The behaviour of the men during their foreign service is reported as good, and none of the acts of lawlessness with which our troops in South Africa have been charged, and which have led to the acrimonious discussion between Sir G. Wolseley and Dr. Russell, have been laid to the charge of the regiment. On the contrary, when the charge was first made by Dr. Russell, the colonel received from the inhabitants of Newcastle, Potchefstroom, and Utrecht, addresses protesting against the regiment being included in war correspondents' sweeping charges, and praising their orderly conduct while quartered in these towns. The only officers left behind in Africa are Major Creagh, who is at present in civil employ in the Lydenburg district, where he has commanded for some time, and is extremely popular with the Boer population, whom he thoroughly understands; and Capt. Saunders, who has remained behind to settle the accounts of Volunteer corps in the Transvaal. Capt. Saunders has been mainly instrumental in knocking these corps into shape, and has been complimented for the way in which he has performed a most difficult task. During their tour of foreign service, the regiment has to regret not only the death of Capt. Moriarty, killed in action, but of Lieut. O'Geran, who died at Hong Kong, and Col. Twemlow, Major Rowland, and Qrmr. Belt, who died in Africa. We understand that the regiment will request permission to put up a stained-glass window in Lichfield Cathedral, to the memory of the officers and men who have died or been killed while abroad, including the name of Dr. Cobbyn, who had been for some time associated with the 80th; and this memorial will be probably the only reminiscence of eight years' hard work, as, with the exception of the C.B. bestowed on the colonel, the regiment does not appear to have much benefited by their late campaigns.

84th Regiment. Capt. Quill has taken up duty as Superintendent of Gymnasia in the Dublin and Belfast Districts, in succession to Capt. Barton, 19th Regt.

90th Light Infantry. Capt. Rawlins has been specially mentioned by Major-Gen. Crealock, C.B., C.M.G., for his services recently in Zululand. Vide 19th Hussars.

105th Light Infantry. In anticipation of the retirement of Lieut.-Col. Bell, the members of the band have presented to Mrs. Bell an elegantly-bound copy of Haydn and Mozart quartettes, as a mark of the esteem in which she and her husband are held by them.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Bucks, under command of Col. Pratt, assembled at High Wycombe on Monday, and afterwards proceeded to Aldershot, where it is encamped on Rushmoor for its annual training.

2nd Royal Middlesex (Edmonton Rifles) will, on assembling at Barnet on Monday next, proceed to Aldershot, under command of Col. Black, and be encamped on Swan Hill plateau for its month's training.

Oxford assembled at Oxford on Monday for its annual training, and subsequently proceeded to Aldershot, where it is encamped on Church plateau, North Camp.

1st Royal Surrey, under command of Col. Evelyn, after assembling at Kingston-on-Thames on Monday, proceeded to Aldershot, and is encamped on Rushmoor Hill for the period of its annual training.

2nd Royal Tower Hamlets will, on assembling at Victoria Park Square on the 21st inst., proceed to Aldershot, to undergo its training, being encamped on Ash Common.

5th West York. The regiment completed its annual training at Knaresborough on Saturday, the 29th ult. The behaviour of the men was extremely good throughout the whole period. The regiment, over 1,000 strong, was inspected by Major-Gen. Willis, C.B., commanding the Northern District, who expressed himself very well satisfied with the clean appearance of the men and the steady manner in which they moved. The regiment also underwent the customary inspection by Col. Lloyd, commanding the Brigade Depôt at York. Col. Gunter, who commands this smart regiment, is about to apply for permission to raise a second battalion. The regiment being a popular one, it will be very easy to enlist the required number of men. The 5th West York is not at present down for a second battalion, but as some other regiments in the county have failed to raise their second battalions, it is hoped that the Authorities will see their way to accepting this spirited offer of Col. Gunter's.

Galway Artillery. It has been notified that the promotion of Capt. O'Hara to the rank of lieut.-col. will be submitted in due course, the establishment of the corps having been increased by two batteries.

Londonderry. The regiment, under command of Col. Conyngham, now training at Londonderry, consists of 2 field-officers, 4 captains, 9 subalterns, the adjutant, quartermaster, surgeon, 31 serjeants, 19 corporals, 6 buglers, and 535 privates.

North Mayo, under command of Lieut.-Col. Knox-Gore, encamped at Ballina for its training, consists on parade of 2 field-officers, 4 captains, 4 lieutenants, the adjutant, surgeon, 22 serjeants, 15 corporals, 5 drummers, and 435 privates. Capt. Wilford, 28th Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy, in succession to Capt. Cox, 87th Foot, whose period of service in the appointment has expired.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

3rd Middlesex Artillery. All who have watched the progress of this splendid brigade will have been gratified to find how highly Col. Ray and his gunners are spoken of throughout the reports of the General officers who commanded at the Brighton Review. Those who were present at Brighton will fully endorse what has been said, the efficiency of the brigade having been the subject of general remark among those military critics who witnessed the operations on Easter Monday. One member of the umpire staff expresses his utter astonishment at finding Col. Ray so thoroughly posted in every detail of his work. But Col. Ray makes his duties a study, and there is perhaps no officer throughout the Volunteer Service who is better fitted to command a regiment.

1st Lanark (Glasgow) Rifles. The annual inspection took place on Saturday last. The inspecting officer was Col. Wiseman-Clarke, 58th and 60th Brigade Depôts. The parade-state was as follows:—Present on parade, 48 officers, 75 serjeants, 51 bandsmen and buglers, 1,000 rank and file—total, 1,174. Absent on leave, 2 officers, 3 serjeants, 1 bugler, and 96 rank and file—total, 102; absent without leave, 5 rank and file. Formation strength, 50 officers, 78 serjeants, 52 band and buglers, 1,101 rank and file—total, 1,281. At the close of the inspection, Col. Wiseman-Clarke expressed himself greatly pleased with the appearance of the men, and commended them very highly. The following regimental order was subsequently issued:—"202 Hope Street, Glasgow, June 1, 1880.—Regimental Order.—The following Sub-District Order is published for information of the corps:—'Sub-District Order.—The officer commanding 59th and 60th Sub-Districts requests that Lieut.-Col. Todd will convey to his regiment the inspecting field-officer's entire satisfaction with the result of his late inspection. The steady and correct manner in which the manœuvres, from first to last, were performed, reflect the highest credit on all ranks. The inspecting field-officer will have much pleasure in reporting most satisfactorily on the very high state of efficiency attained by the 1st Lanark Rifle Volunteers. (Signed), S. M. Wiseman Clarke, Col., commanding 59th and 60th Sub-Districts, Hamilton, May 31, 1880.' (By order), Archd. H. Sharp, Capt. 73rd Regt., Adjt. 1st L.R.V."

3rd London Rifles. A number of correspondents have lately drawn our attention to the conduct of the men of this regiment when off duty, either proceeding to or from parade. The regiment bears so high a character for general appearance, when under arms, that we have been induced to think that the complaints were exaggerated. On Saturday evening last, however, our eyes were opened to the fact that our correspondents had been justified in their censure. We happened to come across a number of men of the regiment—there was no mistaking them, in their smart scarlet tunics, with buff facings—both before and after parade. We saw over 100 men in broad day-light slouch past a field-officer of another regiment, in full uniform, without one of them making the slightest attempt at saluting; whilst as to the behaviour of some twenty men whom we met towards midnight, rifles in hand, we prefer not to enter into particulars; suffice it that it was such as to reflect the utmost disgrace upon the whole Service, and we have never witnessed anything like it before. We fear, therefore, that there is only too much reason for what a correspondent points out, viz.:—"That certain corps in the metropolis go in rather for quantity than quality," our correspondent says, "I would suggest to the commanding officers of the two rival corps, the 2nd and 3rd City of London, that, though they are able to put very strong regiments into the field, they might with advantage exercise a little discretion with regard to the character of the men they enrol."

40th Middlesex Rifles. The officers gave their annual performance at St. George's Hall on the 22nd ult., when the two-act comedy "She Would and He Wouldn't," and Byron's well-known Strand comedy, "Weak Woman," were presented. In the former, Qrmr. Turner and Capt. and Adjt. Higgins shared the honours, both being excellent throughout. "Weak Woman" was principally noticeable for the careful rendering of the part of Dr. Fleming by Major Miller, and the amusing delineations of Tootal by Capt. Sadler, and Edwards by Capt. Gruggen. Capt. Leese did not look the part of Fanshawe, otherwise his performance was one of considerable intelligence, and Capt. White was altogether too heavy as Capt. Ginger, which is supposed to be a comic part. Capt. Florence was quiet and gentlemanly as Medwyn. Miss Bland and Miss Woodzell were both of them good as the nieces, whilst of Mrs. Sadler's Mrs. Gunn it would be impossible to speak too highly.

46th Middlesex Rifles. The regiment was inspected on Saturday evening in the grounds of Lambeth Palace by their honorary colonel, Sir Charles Russell, V.C., M.P.

49th Middlesex Rifles. Col. Burnaby inspected the regiment on Saturday morning in Hyde Park, in presence of H.R.H. the Prince of Teck, its honorary colonel, and anything more creditable than the turn-out of the battalion we never remember to have witnessed. The parade-state showed 668 of all ranks present, out of an enrolled strength of 720, only one man being absent without leave. Each man carried a great-coat, haversack, and water-bottle, all properly fitted, and any casual observer would have found it difficult to distinguish the regiment from a Rifle battalion of the Line, so admirable did it look in every particular. The men are all fine, well set-up fellows, used to open-air work, and marched with a steady step, whilst their officers have them well in hand. Altogether, Col. Taylor is to be congratulated most heartily, for he has shown what a zealous Volunteer commanding officer can do if he likes, and it is not to be wondered at that the Duke of Teck expresses on all occasions the pride he feels at being connected with the Post-Office corps.

19th Surrey Rifles. Is it not time that the War Office instituted inquiries as to the state of this regiment, some proceedings in connection with which are become a public scandal, and are a common topic of conversation among Volunteer officers throughout the metropolis. One of the best regiments in the county of Surrey runs the risk of being ruined, unless action is taken by the Adjutant-General's Department.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. C. B. P.—It has been found necessary to curtail the account in some degree, owing to pressure on the space for naval obituary notices.

COASTGUARD (Sunderland).—The sad event was specially mentioned on May 22, page 342, and has evidently been overlooked by you. Many thanks for your offer.

ADJUTANT.—The statement was a most unjustifiable one. No one would for a moment pretend that the discipline of the Army is what it was under the old system, but it is an utter exaggeration to say that the ranks are filled with "blackguards," and no British officer could allow such an assertion to pass unquestioned.

TORQUAY.—The promotions will appear shortly.

H.—The subject is being taken up by a staunch friend of the British officer, Col. North, who will, no doubt, carry it through.

UMPIRE.—We think your case a very hard one.

WE hear that when any of Sir Garnet Wolseley's Staff in South Africa were desirous of expressing their opinion of the fine sunny weather—a trifle sultry, perhaps, which was not uncommon in Natal and the Transvaal—they exclaimed, "By Jove! it's nearly as hot as Cyprus!" But, officially, all the gallant Cypriots were obliged to follow the cue of the leader, and to declare before the world that Cyprus was just the place that a fellow would select if he desired a cheerful, strategical position, and a residence "combining the comforts of home" with the attractions of Oriental life. One injudicious but truthful colonel, indeed, once described the attractions of the island very tersely,—"It was like Cape Coast Castle, without the castle." But then he had no appreciation of the value of a place d'armes, where the British Government could assemble an army to fall on the flank of a Russian host in Asia Minor, or to fulfil the mission of "the Protectorate" in that afflicted region. The fact is, that if necessary, the British Army must make up its mind to stew in Cyprus, or to freeze in Canada or Afghanistan, with equal fortitude. But we do protest against their being stewed or frozen unnecessarily. No one can deny the strategical and indeed political advantages which Great Britain obtains by the occupation of Cyprus. There must, however, be certain ends in view, in pursuance of which such advantages are likely to be utilised, or there is no reason in the acquisition. The late Government had a high ideal in their foreign policy, and their views were really Imperial. Their successors are bound to throw cold-water on Imperialism; their policy in the East may best be described as an anti-Turkish propaganda. "Delendus est Mahomet." They are engaged in a vestry-room crusade against the Crescent, and Cyprus is to be handed over to the Colonial Office,—which, by the way, is rapidly reverting to its old form in regard to its control of the military forces abroad. The change means nothing to the angry Italians and irritable Greeks, who regard the island as so much of unredeemed Italy or Greece; and it must be very puzzling to the Cypriots, who find that the votes of some thousands of British electors alter in a twinkling the whole of the laws or ordinances under which they live and move and have their being. The Peace and Order Ordinance, the Sale of Land Ordinance, and the Freed Labour Ordinance, measures which Sir Samuel Baker, according to Mr. Ryland, considered to justify the description of our government in Cyprus, as being Turkish rule under a British uniform, are to be repealed, and Sir Garnet Wolseley's administration so far branded with official censure. Sir Charles Dilke's gaiety of heart was most pleasantly manifested in his defence of the occupation of the island, but we may remark that the versatile baronet's argument would have held equally good in justification of our annexing the whole of Turkey, and sticking to it, if we could. "It would be unjust to any population which had been freed from Turkish rule to be restored to it." Should the Home Office, the Foreign Office, the Colonial Office, or the India Office accept with cheerfulness the proposal to await the result of a plébiscite as to British rule in Ireland, Cyprus, Malta, the the Transvaal, or India? The fact is that Cyprus is a "chat d'occasion." We may want it, and we intend to keep it, and all the pretence of making it a bright spot in the East is "hollow brass and tinkling cymbals."

The Military Secretary will hold his Levée every Tuesday at 12, instead of 1 o'clock, as heretofore.

On H.R.H. the Prince of Wales being appointed Colonel-in-Chief of the three Household Cavalry regiments, the officers of the Brigade attended the levée at St. James's Palace on Monday, and went by regimentally (with the exception of the officers on duty),—1st, the 1st Life Guards, headed by the Earl of Lucan, G.C.B.; 2nd, the 2nd Life Guards; 3rd, the Royal Horse Guards. This mark of respect was evidently most gratifying to his Royal Highness, and showed how much the appointment gazetted last week is appreciated in the Brigade.

It may save the Secretary of State for War the trouble of answering a question in the House, if we make it known that Colonelcies-in-Chief carry no pay in any shape or form, and that the appointment of the Prince of Wales to the Household Cavalry and the Duke of Connaught to the Rifle Brigade will cost the country nothing. The appointments are simply an honour conferred upon four distinguished regiments, three of which have found means of showing how proud they are of the high honour conferred upon them.

With reference to the case of the unfortunate senior captain of the 90th Regiment—Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Hackett—which has again been attracting attention, in consequence of his recent supersession by a junior, we may point out that much misapprehension seems to exist. Colonel Hackett can retire on more advantageous terms as a captain—thanks to an anomalous provision in the Royal Warrant—than he could do as a major, which rank he is, of course, incapacitated from holding, owing to his wounds. H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge has from the first shown his sympathy with the officer, and he lately gave him the option of retirement as a captain or major, leaving it to him to say which he preferred. He chose the former, and was then informed that in order to fill up the vacancy in the regiment it would be necessary for him to be passed over by the captain standing next to him. The gazetting of the promotions in succession to Colonel Rogers was delayed for some time, to avert any feelings of mortification on Colonel Hackett's part; but when he made known his intention to sedn in his papers for retirement at some indefinite period, a communication was made to him as to the course it would be incumbent on the Horse Guards to pursue, in the matter of the vacant majority, and he thoroughly acquiesced in the arrangement, and showed no disposition to make a grievance of it. Thus it will be seen that the Horse Guards have acted towards the officer with every consideration, and have even gone out of their way to remove from his mind any idea that they desired to act arbitrarily, or to compel him to quit the Service under pressure. The Warrant, unfortunately, gives no latitude, and a major must have fulfilled certain conditions in order to qualify for increased pension, and an exception cannot be made in Colonel Hackett's favour, strong as are his claims.

It would appear that some misapprehension exists as to that portion of the leading article in our last issue which had reference to the defence of Rorke's Drift in the late war in South Africa. It was not our intention to prefer a charge against the officer alluded to, inasmuch as he has been officially exonerated, and therefore no charge could be made. Our object in referring to the occurrence at Rorke's Drift was to point out what a glorious opportunity of acquiring a splendid military reputation was lost, by an officer whose want of good-fortune merits sincere sympathy.

We have reason to believe that the reports in circulation as to the early retirement of Lieutenant-General Sir John Adye, K.C.B., from the post of Surveyor-General of the Ordnance, are without foundation. This officer hopes to be able to obtain a seat in Parliament before the close of the present year.

It is with regret we learn that very serious charges have been preferred against a distinguished officer who has lately been filling an appointment on the Staff of the Governor of Tasmania, who is accused of having misapplied moneys placed in his keeping for public service. The case has been officially reported, and will, of course, be thoroughly investigated by the military authorities. Meanwhile, it is only an act of justice to the officer whose character is thus impugned to state that throughout the colony of Tasmania the utmost sympathy is expressed for him, and that it is considered that he has been subjected to most inconsiderate treatment. Under the circumstances, we should advise those who have to decide his fate not to arrive at any hasty decision, in a matter which might be found to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Can it possibly be true? A commanding officer of a regiment lately returned from abroad informs us that he a few days since decided to ascertain how many men he could really muster. He issued orders, therefore, for every available man—drilled soldier—to be on parade for his inspection. At the appointed hour he walked on to parade, to find that he had actually got 74 men under arms. These 74 bayonets represented a British infantry battalion! Our correspondent tells us he returned to quarters a "sadder but a wiser man."

The appointment of aide-de-camp to Major-General Luard in Canada has not yet been filled. Indeed, it seems probable that some difficulty will be experienced in getting any officer to accept the appointment, for the Canadian Government refuse to grant regimental pay, which has to be abandoned from the date of embarkation; and as the total sum allowed is only £200 per annum, as against £317 and regimental pay, the pay of aides-de-camp in all other colonies, it is scarcely likely that any officer will voluntarily undertake the responsibilities of a Staff appointment on such terms.

It is, perhaps, not widely known in the Service that the appointment of General Officer commanding the Canadian Militia, lately conferred upon Major-General R. G. A. Luard, is one of the most undesirable posts which a British General officer could well be offered. The work of the officer occupying this important position is three or four times as great as that which generally falls to the lot of an officer holding a colonial command. Yet a Major-General commanding in the colonies draws as pay and allowances a sum of about £1,154, whereas General Luard will receive from the Colonial Government the sum of £830 only. A General officer proceeding to take up a colonial command is entitled, according to the Royal Warrant, to (a) an advance of pay—this, in General's Luard's case, will be refused; (b) passage for self, wife and family, and servants to and from the station to which he is proceeding—General Luard will only be provided with a passage for himself; (c) pay from date of embarkation, to date of disembarkation or return—General Luard will only be allowed pay from July 1, the date upon which he is to take up the actual duties of his command. The Canadians might certainly display a little more liberality, more especially as the Horse Guards goes out of its way to procure for them good men. That Sir Edward Selby Smyth has carried out the duties of the appointment satisfactorily is shown by the flattering manner in which the local press, as well as all ranks of the Active Militia, speak of him on all occasions; and also by the action of the Government itself, in applying for a renewal of his appointment for nine months, when his term expired in October last. General Luard, who will embark for Canada in the course of a few days, bears a high reputation, and is, perhaps, the best man who could have been found for the position the duties of which he has been called upon to fill. It is not too much to expect that the Canadian Exchequer may be influenced to grant such an increase in the emoluments, as to preclude from the mind of a distinguished officer any idea that he is being victimised, or at all events inconsiderately treated, and placed in a worse position than he would have been had he been provided for in any other British colony.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. E. Torriano, Royal Artillery, has been appointed to the command of the Militia Artillery, in the 1st Irish Sub-District, head-quarters Dublin, in succession to Colonel W. W. A. Lukin, Royal Artillery, who has been promoted a regimental colonel.

In another column will be found the announcement of a Company which proposes working in an entirely new direction. The Carriage Co-operative Supply Association (Limited), dealing as it does in a business which, from want of competition and other causes, can hardly be matched for the magnitude of the profits made in it. It must be to the advantage of that large and influential portion of the public interested in carriages and their belongings, that they now have the opportunity in this particular of reaping the benefit arising from the advantages and profits of co-operation, hitherto only enjoyed by shareholders in stores dealing with the daily necessaries of life. If prudently and carefully conducted, we anticipate a great future for the Carriage Co-operative Association.

Two of the few remaining Waterloo veterans have died within the last few days. One of these, Christopher Barnes, expired at the age of 86. He enlisted in the Royal Artillery in 1812, and was wounded at Waterloo, The other was Philip Houghton James, Esq., who died in London on the 2nd inst., in his 86th year. He was present at Waterloo as a Cornet in the 11th Light Dragoons.

The vacancy on the Royal Foundation of Military Knights of Windsor caused by the death of Colonel H. Gahan will be filled by the promotion of Captain J. Baird, late 88th Regiment, from the Lower Foundation.

The statement which appeared lately in the whole of the daily papers, and which emanated from Woolwich, with regard to the Hungarian horses purchased last year by the War Office, has not unnaturally induced those interested in the subject to institute full inquiries. The result, as was expected, has gone to show that facts have been altogether exaggerated, and that the reports have been circulated for sinister objects, which, however, will not have the desired effect of inducing the War Office to trade with the firms which have shown an anxiety to obtain their patronage.

In these days we move quickly, little time can be devoted to the consideration of most things, and there is danger that the question of making amends for the injury done to those officers of the Cavalry and Infantry of the Line who were superseded under the famous Warrant of 1872 may be lost sight of. Parliament should be asked to protect the interests of those branches of the Service which enjoy at least as many of the hard knocks of a military life as fall to the lot of the more fortunate Artillery and Engineers. A question of pay is, no doubt, at the bottom of the unwillingness of the War Office to recognise the just claims of the superseded, but Mr. Childers would do well to remember that it would not cost the country a single farthing to put the unfortunate Line majors in a proper position, brevet rank only carrying pay with it when a captain is promoted to a brevet majority. A brevet lieutenant-colonel obtains no increase either of pay or allowances. It is, therefore, the more difficult to understand how a whole body of deserving soldiers should have pleaded in vain all these years for the redress of an undoubted grievance, which was admitted by a former Secretary of State for War, when promotion was given to the Linesmen to place them on what they, at the time, thought was to be a proper footing, with regard to the favoured scientific corps. Where are the Army champions in the House, that they have allowed this question to go unnoticed all these years? It is no imaginary hardship which is being suffered, for the effects are being felt daily by those concerned.

It is hereby notified that applications for the appointment of Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General in the Commissariat and Transport Staff will be received by the Military Secretary up to December 31, 1880, from officers who have passed the final examination, or the qualifying test at an entrance examination, for the Staff College.

Atalanta. Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, has held a conference of all the captains of the men-of-war in the port, for the purpose of considering the best means to be taken for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and crew of the Atalanta. It was generally agreed that the principal committee should be held in London, and that the Lord Mayor and the First Lord of the Admiralty should be invited to belong to it, sub-committees being formed at Portsmouth, Plymouth, and other dockyard ports, to assist the chief committee in instituting the necessary inquiries respecting the number and condition of those requiring assistance, in collecting subscriptions, and in dispensing relief. The Liverpool Courier says:—"It is very probable that traces of the missing Atalanta have at last been discovered. The captain of the Scotia Queen, which has arrived at Queenstown from Demerara, reports having passed on April 30, in about latitude 30 N., and longitude 60 W., a raft (bolted), apparently made on board a man-of-war or a first-class steamer. Two days afterwards he passed several dead bodies clothed in white jumpers. Apart from the fact that the Scotia Queen has travelled over the track the Atalanta would be supposed to take in her return home from the West Indies, the 'white jumpers' will probably be regarded as conclusive proof that the bodies were those of men belonging to one of her Majesty's ships."

No one in her Majesty's Naval Service is to be considered as entitled as to any reward for finding a torpedo, such work being deemed merely a portion of the ordinary duty.'

THE LATE COMMANDER JOHN BRUCE, R.N.

We have received the following particulars of the sad death of Com. Bruce, R.N., the inspecting commander of the Berwick Division of the Coastguard:—On May 13 he left his home, at Berwick, to visit the stations on the Northumbrian coast, with the intention of returning on Saturday, after paying a night visit on Friday to Holy Island, and firing a rocket for life-saving practice at Alnmouth on Saturday. At midnight he set out from Budle for Holy Island, being ferried across the water at Warren to Ross Sands. He had then walked over 40 miles, and had some four miles further to walk to the Beacons, the point from which he intended to signal to the Coastguardsman on Holy Island to bring a boat over to fetch him. He had three, if not four, blue lights with him in their leather cases. The distance across varies according to the state of the tide, being sometimes as much as a mile and a half. He probably reached the Beacons at 1.30 a.m., and there burnt at least two blue lights, for two empty cases have been found. Tha rest is uncertain, except that a small punt was taken, formerly used for shooting and fishing, and in which a couple of paddles had been left. But what occurred may readily be inferred. On his last night visit to Holy Island, he had been kept waiting over two hours on the same spot, and had said on his return home that he had given a severe reprimand to the Coastguardman, "and that it would never happen again." However, no answer was given to his signals on the present occasion. The Coastguardmen on duty at Holy Island, who were examined at the inquest, did not see them. The chief boatman said:—"If a blue light had been burnt after one o'clock, the men on duty could not have seen it, because they were on a part of the island where it could not have been seen." William Pike, one of the Coastguardmen, said:—"I was on duty from nine on Friday night to three on Saturday morning. If a light had been burnt after half-past two on Saturday morning, I could have seen it." The signals were not seen. Com. Bruce was already exhausted by his walk of fourteen hours and more, and after again waiting a couple of hours—so we assume—and finding that there was no attention paid to the signals. he could not resist the temptation of trying to cross in the punt which was lying there, and which he thought would at any rate carry him across the short distance in safety. The tide was about flood, the wind east and blowing fresh. The craft was some 16 ft. long, rotten and leaky; she soon began to fill, became unmanageable, was turned bottom upwards by the sea, and after a struggle, which, in the boat or out of it, lasted till 4.55 a.m., the hour to which his watch pointed, he was drowned. He had taken off his knapsack, coat, belt, and pistol. Neither the knapsack, nor the coat, nor the belt, nor the pistol have been found; and it is probable that he took them off and put them in the boat before he began to row. From Holy Island he was to have returned to Alnmouth, where he had ordered the Volunteers to be ready to fire the rocket at 7.30, and had expressed a wish to the station-officer that it should be a little before that time, as he was anxious to get home early. When he did not arrive by Sunday, Mrs. Bruce sent for Mr. Wildes, the chief boatman at Berwick, to obtain information. Telegrams were despatched to the stations along the coast, but no news could be obtained. On Monday a search was commenced, and the body was found at 5.30 on Monday afternoon, near Fenham Stakes, with the punt lying, bottom upwards, some 150 yards off. Commander Bruce married in 1870, and leaves a widow and four children, the eldest eight years old, and the youngest two years old. He entered the Navy, July 15, 1852, on board the Mæander, under Capt. afterwards Sir Charles Talbot, K.C.B., and served in her at the Cape of Good Hope until the breaking-out of the Crimean war, when her officers and crew were transferred to the Algiers. In the Algiers, he was present in the Baltic, at the taking of Bomarsund, and in the Black Sea at the capture of Sebastopol, and of Kertch and Yenikale. He was wounded while on shore shortly after the fall of Sebastopol. When the Algiers was paid off, at the end of the war, he was appointed to the Esk, Capt. Sir Robert McClure, and served in the Pacific and afterwards in the Chinese war, until he was invalided for dysentery in the Canton river. On his return home as acting sub-lieutenant he passed the examination in gunnery with full numbers, and received a first-class certificate for navigation. He was given his lieutenant's commission on August 10, 1859. After serving a short time in the Racoon, Capt. Paynter, he was appointed to the Mutine, Capt. Graham; and afterwards as 1st lieut. of the Cameleon, Capt. Hardinge. While in the Cameleon, he on two different occasions captured parties of deserters who had effected their escape to the mainland of British Columbia, a feat then unprecedented. He received the thanks of the courts-martial who tried the prisoners and the approval of the Admiralty, with an intimation that his conduct had been favourably noted for his zeal and ability. On paying off the Cameleon, he again received a complimentary notification from the Admiralty. His next appointment was as lieutenant and commander to the command of the Antelope on the coast of Africa, from which he was invalided; and the next to the command of the Bruiser off the coast of Ireland during the Fenian troubles; and further, he was appointed to the command of the Jackal on the coast of Scotland. On May 27, 1871, he received his commander's commission. In October, 1873, he was appointed Inspecting Commander of the Coastguard at Harwich, and in January, 1874, was appointed to the command of the Fly. In her he was present at Santander during the Carlist disturbances, and was afterwards ordered to China. The Fly was the first gunboat on the spot during the outbreak at Perak, and our readers will remember how Mr. Birch, the resident, borrowed the ship's rifles from the Fly before the outbreak took place. Com. Bruce was reprimanded for landing them; Mr. Birch returned them; and a few days afterwards the Residency was attacked, and Mr. Birch was murdered. When the troops arrived, the Fly helped to take them up the river, and Com. Bruce, by taking possession of the forks of the river at Darien Sabatan, 15 miles higher than it was supposed to be possible to take the ship, saved the Residency and the troops from retreat. For this service he was thanked by Sir W. Jervois on the quarter-deck of his ship. He was present at the capture of Passah Saleh, when he was the first man inside the fort, and took the only gun which was captured. He was subsequently employed blockading the north side of the Perak river. He received the approval of the Admiralty and of the Secretary of State for the Colonies for his services during the expedition. On Dec. 8 last he was appointed Inspecting Commander of the Harwich division of the Coastguard, and on May 15 began the official tour of inspection on which he met with his death. He had the Baltic medal, the Crimean and Turkish medals, with Sebastopol clasp, and the China medal. The verdict of the coroner's jury was "found drowned on Fenham Stakes." The remains were removed with the military honours due to his rank. The coffin was covered with the Union Jack, and upon it were placed his cocked hat and sword. The Coastguardsmen from the surrounding district, under the command of Com. Johnson, R.N., with the drum-and-fife band of the 5th Fusiliers, and all the officers of the regiment who were then at Berwick, escorted the coffin to the railway station at Berwick, the coffin being removed by the Coastguard men, shoulder high, from the house to the hearse and from the hearse to the railway-car in which it was to be taken to Cardiff. At Cardiff, the Coastguard from Penarth removed the coffin to the hearse, and formed the escort to the churchyard of St. Lythan's, where the remains were finally laid in the presence of his brother, Mr. A. C. Bruce Pryce, and other relatives. The funeral was met on the far side of St. Lythan's Down, and followed by a large number of the tenantry on the Duffryn estates.

THE LATE CAPTAIN STIRLING.

The noble character of Capt. Francis Stirling, says a Captain of the Navy, writing to us from Portsmouth, is alone sufficient reason for speaking of his sad death, apart from the great calamity in which his ship and her living freight are included. The following words may give some idea to strangers of the officer whose loss, together with that of his shipmates, we are now deploring; and it may be a solace to some who are mourning for him to see his noble qualities publicly acknowledged. I speak with confidence when I say that no officer in the Navy has won more universal affection and respect among those with whom he has served than Francis Stirling. His brother officers, without exception, remember him with warmer feelings than is usual, even in a Service where men make very close friendships, and are thrown so intimately together. The influence of his quiet and unobtrusive goodness has had, and will continue to have, a lasting effect on almost all who have had the good fortune to know him. He was never known to do an unkind or ill-natured thing, or (still more rare a virtue) to say an unkind word. With the petty officers and men his never-failing good temper, his constant consideration for their well-being, and his justice (always tempered with mercy), made them feel entire confidence in him; and I am quite certain that his friends on the lower deck are, in proportion, as numerous as those in the wardroom. Stirling's calmness in danger will, one may trust, have stood all around him in good stead in their last moments. When, in 1864, the Bombay was burning, and everything that could be thought of to save life had been done, Com. Wilson said to him,—standing on the forecastle amid falling spars and burning ropes, the flames bursting through the upper deck, and the ship in momentary danger of blowing up,—"Now, Stirling, we can do no more; we will jump overboard and swim to the boats." His answer was calm and firm, "There is no hope for me; I cannot swim." He was only saved, after great peril and most painful suspense, from under the bows of the ship, by a volunteer boat's crew, who a second time risked their lives to take off him and a few others, hanging in the water to avoid the flames. The estimation in which he was held at the Admiralty is sufficiently shown by his being selected for the special service in which he has, by a strange providence, followed the steps of another equally noble man and good officer, Marcus Hare.

GREENWICH PENSIONERS.

"Attention has of late been drawn by several of our correspondents," says the Western Daily Mercury, "to changes effected by recent orders of the Admiralty in the distribution of, and the conditions of appointments to Greenwich pensions of the retired warrant officers and seamen of her Majesty's Navy. In one of his speeches, during the election, Sir George Young took notice of the complaints which have been made; and he promised, if he should be elected, to obtain an examination of the case of the complainants. Not having himself succeeded in obtaining a seat in the new Parliament, Sir George has placed the whole case in the hands of Mr. G. O. Trevelyan, M.P. for the Border Burghs, who is particularly well qualified to take charge of it, having been himself Civil Lord of the Admiralty, and who was largely responsible for the institution of those pensions, in the place of the old right of admission to Greenwich Hospital, now abolished. The change has been a very beneficial one, in the opinion of those concerned; and Mr. Trevelyan is naturally interested in the question, how far the alterations effected by the Conservative Government in his own scheme have been improvements, or the reverse. He has accordingly given notice of questions, to be put in the House of Commons, and it is hoped they will elicit the facts required; and perhaps Mr. Trevelyan will be able to do something towards a removal of the grievances which are now urged and which are far from imaginary.

We hear that Admiral Bythesea's appointment as Consulting Naval Officer to the Government of India has been done away with, and that he will leave Simla at the end of June.

Amusements.

The Italian operas have been well attended during the week. At Covent Garden, Madame Adelina Patti has repeated her embodiment of Giulietta in Gounod's opera of "Romeo e Giulietta," and of Rosina in Rossini's "Barbiere di Siviglia." Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" came later in the week, and Madame Sembrich, of the Imperial Opera at Dresden, was announced to make her first appearance in England on Saturday, in Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor."

"Lohengrin," with Madame Christine Nilsson as Elsa, as originally brought out by Mr. Mapleson at Drury Lane in 1875, has been given at Her Majesty's, with the advantage of the direction of Herr Hans Richter, conductor of the Imperial Opera of Vienna, and an enthusiastic admirer of Wagner. "Don Giovanni" was represented on Tuesday, and on Thursday "La Traviata" introduced to this country Mdlle. Lilli Lehmann as Violetta.

Drury Lane has been well filled nightly by "As You Like It," transferred with the same company, scenery, and appointments that secured for Shakespeare's comedy a brilliant run of nearly four months at the Imperial Theatre. On the larger stage, the play is seen to even greater advantage, and Miss Litton's Rosalind commands even a wider range of admiration as acted at the old house, associated with so many memorable historic traditions.

In "Frou-Frou" at the Gaiety, Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt has achieved, as was expected, another triumph, and it seems likely the play will be repeated to large audiences during her engagement. The character created by the young and lamented Aimée Desclée at the Gymnase in 1869 well suits the impassioned style of the actress, and her success is proclaimed by the almost frantic applause of her enthusiastic admirers.

Mr. Albery's new three-act comedy of "Jacks and Jills," produced at the Vaudeville, has met with an unfavourable reception, which, it must be regretfully stated, was thoroughly deserved. The actors did their best to avert the failure, but the intrinsic weakness of the piece was not to be counterbalanced by any amount of histrionic strength. It will be speedily consigned to oblivion, and with it, let us hope, will pass away the remembrance of the rude and impertinent speech made by the author on the occasion to a most enduring audience.

The new ballet produced at the Alhambra, under the title of "Diona," is a very brilliant spectacle, recommended by some graceful dancing and clever pantomimic action by Mdlle. Pertoldi and Mdlle. Gillert, and especially noteworthy for the harmony of colour displayed in the tasteful and singularly original costumes designed by the clever and inventive artist Wilhelm.

Mr. Vincent Ambrose, a new aspirant to the honours of dramatic authorship, took the Imperial Theatre for a day-performance on Tuesday afternoon, that he might produce a new three-act comedy, entitled "A Professional Beauty." Though weak in plot, the piece is bright and natural in dialogue, and the author derived valuable aid from the company engaged in the representation. A very favourable reception was accorded by the large and friendly audience assembled.

The new musical sketch of "Our Ascot Party," furnished by Mr. Corney Grain to Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment, is an appropriate and animated addition to a programme further increased in attraction by a new second part, called "A Flying Visit," to which Mr. Corney Grain has wedded some tuneful music. Another novelty will be produced here next week, called "Very Catching," written and composed by Mr. F. C. Burnand and Mr. J. L. Molloy.

The two-hundredth performance of "The Merchant of Venice" took place at the Lyceum on Monday night. The earliest novelty of the next season will be a new poetical play, by Mr. W. G. Wills, called "Rienzi."

On Tuesday, at Highgate Cemetery, the grave closed over the once popular comedian George Honey, whose death took place the preceding week at the age of fifty-eight.

Full of years and honours passed away on Sunday last Mr. James Robinson Planché, a graceful and accomplished writer, who contributed more than any man of his time to render the entertainments of the stage worthy of the presence of intelligent audiences. Mr. Planché, who expired in his eighty-fifth year, wrote in the course of his prolonged career nearly two hundred pieces. The deceased, who for the last fifteen years had filled the high official position of Somerset Herald, was interred on Friday in Brompton Cemetery, the funeral being attended by a crowd of mourners, deeply regretting the loss of one of the firmest of friends and liveliest of companions.

The Royal Naval Club of 1765 dined at Willis's Rooms on Saturday in celebration of her Majesty's birthday:—Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney, Kt., C.B. (in the chair); Vice-Admirals Arthur Mellersh, C.B., and Robert Robertson; Rear-Admirals J. C. Soady and Sir W. H. W. Hewett, V.C., K.C.B.; Capts. Sir Thomas C. Bruce, Kt., C.B., F. Durrant, Robert O'Brien Fitzroy, R. S. Bateman, Cyprian Bridge, C. J. Rowley, Aleck P. Hastings, E. Maunsell, P. H. Dyke, E. White, Arthur T. Brooke, Alfred T. Dale, Edmund J. Church, H. Comber, H. A. Hippesley, A. Poland, F. C. R. Robinson, Horatio Nelson, George R. Hope, John Fellowes, William Spratt, Duncan G. Davidson, T. R. Blackburne, Noel S. N. Digby, Henry Crozier, Thomas Stuart, A. N. Fairman; Commanders Craigie, A. C. S. Blackett, Lovett Cameron, C.B., Custance Lewis B. Sully, W. J. England, and Mr. H. J. Kelly, R.N., &c.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLE-SOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

Mr. Childers, in reply to Col. Owen Williams, stated on Monday, in the House, that as soon as the Government had arrived at a conclusion upon the very important questions discussed by the Army Commission presided over by Gen. Lord Airey, the Report would be laid on the table, or, at any rate, so much as could be given without detriment to the public interest.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to supply the prosperous and progressive Colony of South Australia with an institution similar to those which, in other parts of Australia and New Zealand, have proved so highly successful and so popular both with the Colonist and with the home investor. Local interest in the establishment of such an association leaves no room to doubt that this Company will receive strong Colonial support.

Notwithstanding the fact that in the neighbouring Colonies several Land Mortgage Companies are in successful operation, no Company doing a Mortgage and Agency business exists specially identified with the Colony of South Australia—the granary of Australasia, as well as containing by far the largest area of cultivated land in the group.

The growing importance of South Australia, as evidenced by its commercial, agricultural, pastoral, and mineral statistics, as well as by the rapid increase of its population and revenue, point to it as one of the most promising fields for the increased employment of English capital. It is intended, therefore, to limit the called-up capital to one-fifth of the nominal value of the shares, mortgage debentures being issued to an amount not exceeding the remaining four-fifths, on such terms, and bearing such interest, as may be agreed upon, and with attached interest coupons.

The business of the Company will consist in making advances on freehold, and other interests in land and buildings, and in developing the resources of the Colony by assisting the Settlers with loans on their wool and other produce, and in the general transaction of Agency business under adequate securities. Registration of title having for many years been in operation in South Australia, transfers, mortgages, and liens are promptly and inexpensively effected.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the office of the Solicitors. Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the Bankers or Brokers, or at the Company's Offices.

THE SOUTH AUSTRALIAN LAND MORTGAGE and AGENCY COMPANY (Limited).—The LIST of APPLICATIONS for SHARES in the above Company will be CLOSED on Monday, June 7, for London, and on Tuesday, June 8, for the country.—By order,

AUSTRALIAN WINES.

H. ST. GEORGE WILKINSON & CO.

were awarded in Australia, and at Vienna and Paris.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are almost a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered (in not less than three-dozen cases) free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—At the change of seasons many persons feel oppressed, without knowing why they are so; they are aware something within them is wrong, though they cannot detect the defective organ. A few doses of these powerfully purifying and eminently cooling Pills will restore regularity to every part of the system, will cast out all impurities lurking in the frame, and will thoroughly expel the last traces of disorder, however hidden the disease may be, however obscure its cause. With Holloway's medicine relief is insured without risk; erroneous action is rectified without disturbing natural regularity, health is reinstated, and with it return the cheerful feelings which unmistakably tell the recent invalid that all within is right again.

THE SOUTH-AFRICAN CAMPAIGN, 1879.

Compiled by J. P. MACKINNON, late 25th K.O.B.'s, formerly 72nd Highlanders, and S. H. SHADBOLT; and Dedicated, by permission, to Field-Marshal H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, Commanding-in-Chief.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington will publish the above work in one large volume. It contains Cabinet Portraits, finely reproduced by the Woodbury process of Photography, of the fifty-nine Officers of the British Army who have lost their lives in the late war, together with Biographies compiled from materials furnished by their relatives and surviving comrades.

By permission of the Empress Eugénie, the list is headed with a photograph and brief memoir of his late Imperial Highness Prince Louis Napoleon.

Introductory to the artistic portion of the work, there is a Sketch of the War, embodying detailed accounts of the various engagements.

Appended to the Introductory Sketch is a complete List of all the Officers of the British Army who were engaged in the campaign, with an account of their services.

The work will also contain a Map of the country, showing the movements of the Army.

Officers who have not yet sent in a record of their services in the War, are requested to communicate at once with Mr. S. H. SHADBOLT, Beechcroft, Chislehurst. Prospectuses, containing complete Lists of the Memoirs, will be forwarded, on application being made to the Publishers, Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Crown Buildings, 188 Fleet Street, London.

ARUNDEL & CALEDONIAN HOTELS.

The ARUNDEL is near the New Law Courts, in the Strand, being next door to the Temple Station.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

THE reply of the Secretary of State for War to Colonel Owen Williams's question respecting the Report of Lord Airey's Commission is another indication of the dislike of the Authorities, no matter what party in the State furnishes the chairs in the Government Offices with their occupants, "to face the fence" in dealing with the condition of the Army. The general recommendations of the Report are well known, but a good deal of disagreeable evidence, given by distinguished officers, has been already "modified,"—so much so, indeed, that if we be rightly informed, those who gave the evidence can scarcely recognise their original statements, owing to the suppressions and excisions to which they have been subjected. There are two points clearly accentuated in Mr. Childers' reply. The first is, that the Government has not arrived at any conclusions on the important questions discussed by the Commission presided over by General Lord Airey; the second, that they do not intend to lay the Report of the Commission as it was presented to the late Secretary of State on the table of the House. As regards the first point, it would be too much to expect that Mr. Childers could have formed by this time any very definite conclusion on any important question of Army reform, but it is is plain that, whatever propositions the new Secretary of State for War may ultimately bring forward will be based on only those recommendations of the Report which may be selected for adoption, the distasteful suggestions being carefully eliminated, as being calculated to do "detriment to the public interest." Lord Airey, however, in his place in Parliament has the power of justifying the measures recommended by his Commission. We hope he will have the courage of his convictions, and that he will do his duty to the Commission and the country. It may be remembered that in the last Parliament all suggestions were met by the stereotyped reply that the Government were awaiting the Report of Lord Airey's Commission. Nothing could be done till that Report was forthcoming, and much stress was laid on the professional position of its members and the value of their labours. Then, when, after much manipulation and delay, the Report was ready, and was actually in Pall Mall, evasive answers were given to questions put by those who were naturally impatient to see it. "The Horse Guards had not sent it up to the War Office, but it was hoped that no great delay would occur." And so the time wore away. Anything for delay. Why face the fence yet? Now, it seems the new Government not only stand in need of more time to deliberate on what is to be done, but declare that they will not make public those portions of the Report which they think cannot be given without detriment to the public interest, which in this case may be taken to mean that they will not publish any opinions which do not accord with their own views. It may be asked of what use it is to go through the solemn and tedious farce of collecting a body of eminent officers and officials, to collect evidence and to hear the opinions of the most distinguished men in the Service, if the record of their judgment be whittled away to suit the doctrinaire theories of civilian administrators? On one vital question there is a concurrence of opinion. The present state of the Army is not satisfactory. The military resources of the Empire are not equal to the pretensions of a first-class Power in the field, and do not respond to any emergency without great strain and dislocation. The quality of the regiments is most unequal,—the composition of a small expeditionary column throws the Horse Guards into an agony. When our regiments are once filled up and exposed to the severity of a campaign, the fine fighting temper and mettle of the material soon vindicate their superiority and worth, and the regiments now engaged in Afghanistan may be considered veteran battalions. But it cannot be said that there are very many like them, and the casualties of war, disease, and climate are effectually diminishing the strength of our trained forces in the field. That must be the case with every army, but it is a most wasteful system in every way to send out drafts of very young men to fill up the ranks, and to take the chances of the survival of the fittest. It is more wasteful and extravagant still to destroy the efficiency of the home battalions, which may be, at a short notice, called upon to furnish the first line for active service, by draining them of their rank and file as fast as they are trained; and the sorry spectacle which was presented by the regiments which were sent off to South Africa after the dismal scare of Islandwana, ought never to be absent from our minds as the answer to the question, "Are we more ready now?" should ever be before the thoughts of the Military Authorities. To know the truth, and to act as if it were falsehood, is a crime against the State on the part of any servant who has the power to act on his knowledge. Of all official sins the worst is optimism, and there are reasons to suspect that it is not unknown amongst us. "Ready to the last button of a gaiter!" It is no response to the earnest cry of those who see danger ahead, to hear that "the sky is clear and the water smooth." The expressions of confident belief that the Army is "as brave and as well disciplined as ever it was," well founded as they may be, convey no satisfaction to the troubled spirits of those who are sick of "meddle and muddle," and who, convinced from their own observation that the state of the Army as a whole furnishes no security for the maintenance of the great position of this country in a supreme struggle with enemies more formidable than Kafirs, Ashantees, Abyssinians, or Afghans, demand a vigorous and patriotic effort on the part of those charged with the responsibility of Government to give us the best guarantee of "peace with honour," as it is of "war with victory,"—a well-organised military force."

The net result of the Naval debate on Monday last was not an overpowering condemnation of the late administration of the Navy, nor a promise of any very herculean efforts to restore our Ironclad Fleet to its position of supremacy in Europe, as might have been expected, from the loud and unsparing denunciations of Mr. Smith and his colleagues by Mr. Reed and Mr. Lefevre, and from the gloomy views of Mr. Brassey, when all these gentlemen were candidates for Parliament and office. Mr. Reed, it is true, expresses his usual alarmist opinions upon the state of the Navy; but then Mr. Reed is remembered as the author of "scares." But Mr. Lefevre, and the Board which he very creditably represents in the House of Commons, only propose that some £20,000 should be spent on ironclad construction, in addition to the sum put down for the purpose in the Estimates of the last Board; and they propose, by doing this, to finish the building of the Inflexible in the course of this year, and the Ajax and Agamemnon in the course of the next. This is not very heroic, but it is useful. It is more satisfactory, however, to hear from Mr. Lefevre that his friends and colleagues in the Government have learned a good deal since they were last in office. Amongst other things, they have learned that an ironclad, even expeditiously constructed, cannot take much less than three years and a half to build, so that it is of no use expecting suddenly to increase our first-class fighting ships upon the outbreak of a war. It is, therefore, imperatively necessary that we should at all times have a Fleet large enough and powerful enough to be ready for any emergency. It can hardly be said that we have such a Fleet at the present moment; for ships deteriorate rapidly, and science advances, and, above all, other nations do not stand still, so that it becomes necessary constantly to keep moving, and not only to see that year by year we supply the annual waste of the Service, but that we do not allow ourselves to be passed in the race by other nations. We have never approached the question as if every foreign ironclad were a Duilio or Dandolo, and every British ship a mere cockle-shell, or as if, in time of war, we should be opposed single-handed to the combined force of all Europe, and each one of our ships would be attacked by a whole squadron of the enemy. Of course, it is possible that without allies we might be called on to encounter a strong combination of other Powers, and it might happen that our less powerful vessels might come into collision with some of the most heavily armed and heavily armoured of the enemy; but we must not forget that if many of our ships are old, and of types that have long ago ceased to be regarded as first-class fighting-ships, the strides of science have also left far behind numbers of the vessels which still find a place in foreign Navy Lists, nor that the Admiralty have abandoned the policy of endeavouring to reach the extreme limit of armour-carrying capacity for the more sensible plan of building smaller and swifter unarmoured but heavily armed ships. One announcement made by Mr. Lefevre will certainly be received with unmingled satisfaction, as being that of a discovery which will put an end to a long-vexed controversy, and will probably result in a very large saving in the cost of ship repairs. At last it has been ascertained that the very rapid deterioration of ships' boilers in the Navy may be prevented by the simple expedient of keeping them full of water, instead of, as hitherto, carefully emptied. It must be admitted that it is scarcely creditable to the committee of skilled and scientific officers which sat for years investigating this subject, that they were not able to arrive at this conclusion before. Another "Boiler Committee" was, we believe, appointed last year, and we presume this discovery is due to their inquiries. It has long been argued, by analogy from the boilers of merchant steamers, that it is not use, but disuse, that has tended to injure the boilers of the Navy, and it may be hoped that the life of a naval boiler may now be as long as that of one in a mail steamer.

The Army owes Lord Percy a debt of gratitude for calling the attention of the House of Commons to the grave hardships now inflicted on Purchase officers, by refusing them permission to bequeath the value of their commissions. The debate which ensued did not produce any immediate result, but it showed plainly that the sympathies of the Members were with Lord Percy, and it, at all events, extorted from Mr. Childers an assurance that he would look into the matter. The Secretary of War tried to make out that it was a complicated question, which could only be dealt with as part of a large scheme. This is not, however, the case. If Lord Percy's suggestion were carried out, the only result would be simply an expenditure of a further three-quarters of a million on the abolition of Purchase. The argument that it would be unfair to let a non-Purchase officer go into action knowing that the State would make a provision for the widow of his Purchase comrade, and none for his own, is fallacious. The Purchase officer would merely bequeath that which he had invested, while the non-Purchase officer, having invested nothing, would have nothing to bequeath. Besides the widow of the latter, if she got no sum of money down, would, at all events, receive a pension. As Sir Henry Havelock-Allan pointed out, in former days the Purchase officer could not complain that if he were killed, he would lose not only his life, but a large sum of money, while his non-Purchase comrade would only lose his life. In those days, the Purchase officer deliberately risked his money for the sake of rapid advancement. Now, he advances pari passu with his non-Purchase comrade. It certainly is a scandal, and must seem so, especially to foreigners, that the State should derive a distinct monetary advantage from the death of officers in the field. During the Zulu and Afghan wars, the amount lost by officers' families and gained by the State amounted to upwards of £31,000. This, though a mere flea-bite to the Treasury, is a large sum to be lost by a score or two of families. The fact is, all these hardships, all this discontent and scandal, would have been spared us, had the Government, when it confiscated officers' vested rights, arbitrarily terminated their contracts, and paid officers down at once the value of their commissions. It is certainly strange that British officers should have been treated less liberally than the West Indian owners of slaves.

We shall hail with sincere pleasure the advent of the day when the degrading punishment of Flogging shall be abolished; but we do not feel at all sure that the steps which have been taken to reduce the amount of corporal punishment in our Army have been concomitant with regard to discipline. The present Ministry are pledged to abolish flogging. Indeed, one would have thought, from their speeches when out of office, that no one hour should elapse after their return to power ere the use of "cat" and lash were forbidden in the Services. But now come the responsibility of office, and they ask for time. They are going to institute careful inquiries into the system of punishments in foreign Armies. That is all moonshine. They might as well say they were going to make inquiries into the mode of recruiting abroad, in order to throw light on the mode of filling the ranks in this country. Our Army is almost unique in its composition. The small Regular force of the United States, which is held under an iron discipline, is somewhat like the British Army as regards the classes from which it is officered, and the way in which it is raised; but it is never exclusively employed as a military body out of its own country, and whenever there is a foreign war, the United States Army is largely aided by Volunteers, and on any of the rare occasions on which it has served out of the United States there were more Volunteers than Regulars. It is to be spoken of with respect as a highly-disciplined mercenary army, but it is, like our own, a purely mercenary army, and raised by voluntary enlistment, a considerable proportion of the recruits being Irish, English, and German. The modes of punishment on active service are such as Mr. Taylor and his fellows would view with horror, and if the Government mean to suggest that they are about to popularise military service among the more respectable classes of townspeople and agriculturists by the introduction of foreign punishments, they are likely to deceive or to be deceived. "See what short service has done!" shout the excited and delighted reformers; "it gave us 29,000 recruits in one year!" Well, if that were so, they cannot say at the same time that flogging hindered recruiting. Perhaps their contention would be that the 29,000 recruits would have come from more desirable classes, but we do not believe that any men who are anxious for a military career and a soldier's life are deterred from taking the shilling by the knowledge that the "cat" is used for punishing Military crime of the worst type. Those who fear the lash must belong to the least eligible material for an Army which is to maintain the national renown. They know their own failings best. But one thing is certain,—the "cat" is doomed. Let us hope that there will never be any reason to regret it. But we are not sanguine enough to believe that any army—and assuredly not the British Army—can be held together by mere moral suasion. It is not the soldiers who will suffer, it is the poor people of occupied districts who will have to deplore the results of cruel humanitarianism.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh struck his flag on board the Lively at Devonport on Friday evening, the 4th inst., and proceeded on leave of absence, having been called to St. Petersburg, to attend the funeral of the Empress of Russia. The Duke assisted on Wednesday at the interment of her late Imperial Majesty, in the cathedral of the fortess of SS. Peter and Paul.

The Channel Squadron, which was ordered to Portland early this week from Bantry Bay, will remain about ten days at that anchorage, and will complete with stores, coal, provisions, &c. Admiral Hood, with the new second-in-command, Rear-Admiral Somerset, will then again put to sea, and will, after a short cruise, return to Berehaven, which will for some time be the head-quarters of the Squadron.

The Admiralty has absolutely declined to make any allowance for lodging to those officers who applied for permission to join the senior torpedo class, which was dismissed last week, after it became known that the Naval College at Portsmouth would be closed, on account of the defective state of the drainage. We have more than once alluded to the injustice inflicted upon these officers, who, while on half-pay, have been required to pay the expenses attendant upon their proceeding to Portsmouth on this duty. If officers showed less willingness to work for nothing and to pay for their own quarters when employed for the benefit of the Service, it would be impossible for the Admiralty to adhere to the present system of giving torpedo instruction, or rather charging officers for endeavouring to become efficient.

The principal change in the work ordered to be executed by the new Admiralty during 1880-81 appears to be the abandonment of the building of a third proposed ironclad, of a corvette of the Comus class, and a despatch-vessel; the increased rate of completion of the ironclads already laid down, and the building of a third steam cruiser.

The question of the cabin accommodation and messing arrangements accorded to that valuable class, the Warrant Officers of the Navy, is under consideration at the Admiralty, with a view to some improvements being introduced. The Commander-in-Chief at the Home Ports have been called upon to ascertain from the Warrant Officers in the harbour ships and reserves their wishes on this matter.

The lost Atalanta's books were ordered to be closed on Friday last, from which date all full pay and allotments will necessarily cease. Arrangements will be made for handing over to the widows and others dependent upon those who lost their lives in the ship the balance of pay due to their deceased relatives. The wives of petty officers and seamen and Marines will be given a gratuity equal in amount to one year's pay of their late husbands; and the widows of officers will be awarded the special pensions provided for those whose husbands lose their lives on service, and the orphans will receive compassionate allowances. Meanwhile, the Relief Fund will be established, with sub-committees at the ports, and every effort will be made to alleviate so far as possible the distress caused by this calamity.

Lieutenant William May, in command of the torpedo-vessel Vesuvius, has, we hear, compiled a Whitehead torpedo manual, which has met with the approval of the Admiralty, and will probably be adopted in the Service.

Directions have been given for thirty petty officers and seamen to be selected at the Home Ports as competitors at the forthcoming Wimbledon Meeting. Sixteen Marines from head-quarters will also be sent to Wimbledon to compete for the Army and Navy Challenge Cup.

A mixed Committee is, we believe, to be appointed to sit upon matters connected with the embarkation of troops, horses, and munitions of war. Admiral Sir William Mends, K.C.B., Director of Transports, is named as the chairman of the Committee.

Unpleasant rumours are beginning to gain ground as to the future of the Royal Marine Artillery, it being very generally believed that the Committee will be found to have recommended the ultimate total abolition of this branch of the Marine Forces. Why a Naval Service, in which gunnery now plays so very important a part, should retain some thousands of "Light Infantry," instead of adding to the efficiency of the Fleet by having a strong reserve of trained "gunners," is not easily understood. Marines, whether red or blue, do not go aloft. They should be thoroughly trained to heavy guns, and not simply to marching and skirmishing. But if it be thought that the Light Infantry are better adapted for landing, surely the recent services of Naval Brigades are sufficient to show that for such shore-fighting as our ships are called upon to do, Blue-jackets and blue Marines are everything that could be desired. The cost of the Artillery Branch, however, is the cause of its fall, though it would have been far better to have turned the whole of the Marines into gunners less highly and expensively trained than the present Marine Artillery. Instead of that, however, we hear that recruiting for the Artillery Branch is to cease, and the standard for the Infantry is to be reduced, so as to keep that branch up to its complement. But about this, Parliament will, doubtless, have something to say.

Sweden is very proud of her explorers, and nothing has been left undone that could mark the estimation in which they are held by their countrymen. Lieutenant Palander, who navigated the Vega some three thousand miles along unsurveyed coasts, is now Count Louis Palander de Vega, so that the undertaking which won for him his patent of nobility will for ever be associated with his name.

As we have more than once alluded to the claims of Rear-Admiral Leveson Somerset for employment, he having been allowed to remain unemployed while juniors were provided for, we are glad to find that he has been selected to succeed Rear-Admiral Waddilove as second-in-command of the Channel Squadron. Admiral Somerset has not been afloat for some years, his last appointment being as senior officer at Bermuda, since which time he has spent two years on half-pay.

The Ruby was to sail from Zanzibar on Sunday last for Bombay, to pay-off and receive her new crew, now on passage out in the Himalaya. The Himalaya arrived at Limasol on June 9, and proceeded for Bombay the same day.

Directions have been received at Portsmouth for the Dasher to be placed at the disposal of the Inspector-General of Fortifications, on his making his inspection of the defences of the Channel Islands.

Acting Sub-Lieutenant William H. Sharp, now studying on board the Excellent, has been selected to qualify for navigating duties.

By the retirement of Captains Pascoe and Servante, R.M.L.I., which takes place on the 21st and 25th inst. respectively, Lieutenants R. P. Coffin and J. C. Wardell will obtain their companies, and the promotion of the latter officer will create a vacancy for an assistant instructor of musketry at the Plymouth Division.

Captain J. J. Morris, instructor of gunnery at the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, has been entered at the Inns of Court for the purpose of going through the necessary course to qualify as a barrister-at-law.

We regret to have to announce the death of Major-General Arthur Sandys Stawell Walsh, C.B., of the Royal Marines, which took place at Plymouth on the 4th inst. General Walsh entered the Service in 1828, and commanded the 1st Battalion of Royal Marines at the attack on Canton in December, 1857, for which he received the C.B. Being on the Retired List, his death does not give any vacancy to the serving corps.

Application has been made to the Admiralty to allow the Engineers' mess in the Helicon to be abolished, for there are but two officers of this branch borne in the Helicon, and the maintenance of a "mess" under such circumstances is difficult.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., with the squadron under his command, arrived at Palermo on Monday, June 7, and sailed on the 10th for Durazzo.

On Tuesday last all the letters addressed to officers and men of the Atalanta which had accumulated at Portsmouth Post-office awaiting her arrival at Spithead, were forwarded to the Dead-letter Office at London. They numbered over 1,000.

In the Medina, now undergoing a refit at Portsmouth, an attempt will be made to improve the handiness of this class of gunboat by carrying down the rudder to the depth of the false keel. We have to pay dearly for experiments in Naval construction.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., having been ordered to take in three months' stores and provisions, left Berehaven on Wednesday for Portland.

It is with deep regret that we announce the sad death of Captain W. H. Liddell, late of the Tamar, which took place at Southsea on Monday last, in consequence of a fall. The circumstances attending this melancholy occurrence were inquired into on Tuesday by a coroner and jury. Captain Liddell was the second son of Commander James Liddell (who is one of the few survivors of the battle of Algiers), and was educated at the Naval School at New Cross, where he obtained his cadetship by passing the best examination. As midshipman, he was wrecked in the Mutine. He obtained his commission as lieutenant by competition at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth. He served as lieutenant in the Curaçoa, but was invalided from the Crimea, and after remaining some two and a half years on shore returned to the Excellent as a gunnery lieutenant, where he remained till promoted, when he was engaged in completing the Admiralty treatise on "Naval Ordnance." He was employed on the Gun-cotton Committee, and subsequently as secretary to the Admiralty Torpedo Committee. The torpedo manuals at present in use in the Service contain a great deal of his work. He was commander of the Zealous in the Pacific, and afterwards commanded the Coastguard at Exmouth. As captain of the Tamar, from the command of which he had only recently been relieved, his kindly manner and desire to see officers and men comfortable, won for him the friendship and esteem of all who took passage in the ship.

The Foam will be commissioned at Chatham on the 15th inst., for the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station.

The Admiralty have approved of an arrangement of nets and spars for protection against torpedoes being supplied to the Sultan. The plan is inexpensive and simple, and, having been practically tested by the Hecla, is pronounced to be thoroughly effective.

We learn from Cyprus that recruiting for the corps of "Cyprus Pioneers," now in process of formation, is being extensively proceeded with in that island, the men being enlisted exclusively from the Cypriote population, both Turks and Greeks being represented, the former preponderating. The dress of the men is a white shell jacket, loose blue pantaloons, knickerbocker shape, leggings being always worn. The head-dress is the Turkish scarlet fez and tassel, with a white puggaree. Arms, Martini-Henry rifle and bayonet. Accoutrements, valise equipment, brown leather straps. The men are as a rule well set up and smart, quite different in appearance from the ordinary Cypriote peasant, who, in his domestic state, is the incarnation of laziness.

An influential gathering of the Syrian Railway Association is expected on Tuesday next, at 3 p.m., at its offices, 1 Westminster Chambers, Victoria Street, and any officers not belonging to the Association, but interested in the opening-up of Syria and Palestine, can obtain admission by applying to the honorary secretary, Commander Cameron, C.B.

Telegraphic news has been received from Valparaiso, announcing the capture of Arica by the Chilians.

The Royal Commission is bringing its labours to a close by the distribution of the last batch of prizes awarded to exhibitors by the jurors of the Paris International Exposition, 1878. The diplomas of mention honorable have reached the hands of Sir Cunliffe Owen, the secretary, for distribution, and Lieutenant R. H. Armit, R.N., the sole Naval recipient of an award, was last week presented with a diploma, in consideration of his being the first to apply the geometry of the cycloids to the construction of screw propellers. The diplomas are beautiful specimens of the engraver's art.

Letters have been received by the Admiralty from Captain Morant, senior officer of the Irish relief squadron at Galway, up to the 6th inst., stating that the Bruiser, Imogene, and Valorous were at Galway, and the Goshawk at Westport. The Hawk arrived at Westport on the 5th; having distributed stores, would sail on the 7th for Galway, visiting islands to ascertain the needs of the islanders.

A correspondent at Malta sends us the following account of the first annual Royal Naval Rifle Meeting held under the patronage of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., on May 20 and 21. Captain Lord Walter Kerr presided, and was assisted by Lieutenants the Hon. M. Bourke, Moore, and Littledale, R.N.; Grant, Dickinson, and Gibson, R.M.A.; Lang, Baker, Martin, Dick, Neeld, and Morrison, R.M.L.I., who formed the executive committee. In all, 60 prizes were offered to be competed for by the officers and men of the Mediterranean Squadron, and the shooting, in spite of a strong breeze blowing on May 21 across the range, was fairly up to the mark. George Mitchell, gunner, R.M.A., of the Rupert, and Henry Mitchell, A.B., of the Alexandra, William Coverly, 2nd class P.O., of the Téméraire, and William Uniacke, chief petty officer, of the Alexandra, won the principal prizes, scoring each 22 points out of a possible 25, at from 200 to 500 yards' range. The officers' first prize was won by Staff Commander Gravener, of the Téméraire, Mr. Roffey, engineer, of the Alexandra, taking the second, and Mr. Lyons, midshipman, of the Téméraire, securing the third prize. The San Rocco Stakes were won by John Vincent, 1st-class P.O., of the Téméraire. The Rinella Stakes fell to Joseph Beck, 1st-class P.O., of the Thunderer, and the Ricasoli Cup was carried off by Philip Lane, 1st-class P.O., also belonging to the Thunderer. The competition for these prizes was remarkably keen, and great interest was evinced throughout the proceedings by both officers and men. A novel feature was introduced at this meeting, in the shape of an automatic swimming man,—a much more appropriate target for seamen than a running deer. The antics of this automaton created great fun, and the firing points were crowded all day by eager competitors for the various "Swimming-man Pools," which were continually being fired for at sixpence a shot for officers, and threepence for men, the proceeds being each day divided amongst the best shots, after deducting one-tenth of the receipts for expenses. The whole proceedings passed off in a most satisfactory manner, and Lord Walter Kerr and the committee deserve great credit for the success which attended their efforts to establish an annual Royal Naval Rifle Meeting at Malta.

Captain James E. Erskine arrived home last week from the Brazils, and has entered upon the duties of private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty.

So much has been heard about the unhealthiness of Cyprus, that the following extract from a private letter just received from that station cannot fail to prove interesting:—"The climate up to the present in the plains has been delightful, the thermometer averaging 85° in the sun for the past month. As the site of the present cantonment at Polemidia—four miles inland from Limassol—has been chosen with a view to the accommodation of troops all the year round, and up to the present has proved exceptionally healthy, it is to be regretted that the troops have not been allowed to remain there during the summer, provided as it is with ample accommodation in the way of huts and accessory buildings, instead of moving for two or three months to the fastnesses of Mount Tröodos, where the climate is so variable that last year 20 per cent. of the troops stationed there were at one time in hospital, suffering from fever and ague. The cemetery of the Royal Engineers can testify to the unhealthiness of the latter place, that corps having lost five men out of 100 encamped there for three months of last year. Added to this, is the difficulty of transporting supplies and obtaining water for the troops stationed there. From Platris, where the road constructed last year by the Royal Engineers terminates, 34 miles from Limassol—it is only five miles to the top of Tröodos, but with a difference in elevation of over 3,000 ft. between the two places—it has been found impossible to construct a cart-road; consequently, everything has to be transported by pack-mules and camels. The water-supply being also some distance from the camping-ground, it has to be conveyed thither in earthenware chatties on mules. Last year, the expenditure on this item alone amounted to £300, and every other service has to be performed at a proportionately high charge."

By the death of General Witzleben, our German contemporary, the Militär-Wochenblatt, has lost an editor which it will find some difficulty to replace, while German military literature generally has been deprived of a busy and able pen. The deceased was best known by his work, Heerwesen und Infanteriedienst, which has just passed through its fifteenth edition, and which for a generation has been the recognised standard work on the subject.

Tuesday's Gazette announces the retirement of Captain P. C. C. Savage, 64th Regiment. This officer joined the Army as an ensign, at the age of seventeen, in 1855, having been given an ensigncy in the Royal Canadian Rifles, without purchase, from the Royal Military College, on the death of an elder brother in the Crimea. On April 1, 1870, with fifteen years' service, he was promoted to an unattached company without purchase, on the disbandment of the Canadian Rifles; and now, with twenty-five years' service, after having been ruined professionally by the act of the Government in reducing his regiment in 1870, he is retired, and, thanks to the most unjust ruling of those who drew up the Act for the abolition of Purchase, he is denied all privileges extended to other officers of his rank,—his "over-regulation" money,—because, forsooth, he happened to be on half-pay when Purchase was abolished! The case of the half-pay officers is a monstrously hard one; indeed, it is a disgrace to us as a nation that we should treat old and deserving soldiers with such unfairness. The unattached promotions given in 1870 were accorded to meritorious officers as a reward for past services. Yet they now find that by accepting the proferred "reward" they have brought about their ruin. This, notwithstanding Lord Cardwell's promises, that no man would suffer by the abolition of Purchase.

The sooner a thorough revision of the Army Discipline Act takes place the better, for it is found defective in many particulars, and, instead of rendering clear Military law, it has, in numerous instances, made it more intricate and perplexing than ever. The following is an instance of the manner in which Military law, as applicable to the Auxiliary Forces, has been simplified. The sentence quoted is from section 5, Commencement Act:—"So much of the Army Mutiny Act as relates to the Auxiliary Forces, and is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Army Discipline Act, 1879, shall continue in force." This is a truly simple way of finding out the law as applicable to the Auxiliary Forces, and the mode of procedure must be as follows:—First find the clause in the Mutiny Act which refers to the point you wish to settle, and then read through the whole of the Army Discipline Act to see whether there be any inconsistency! There is no doubt that in some points its provisions are contrary to the intentions of its compiler; for instance, we cannot suppose for a moment that it was ever contemplated to take away from commanding officers the power of depriving a lance-corporal of his stripe, and yet the law advisers of the Crown have discovered that such is the case. The power of reducing non-commissioned officers to the ranks is taken away from officers commanding Militia regiments. This, which was granted under the old Articles of War, was a very salutary provision, since Militia non-commissioned officers are very different from those in the Regular Army. The latter are continuously under discipline all the year round, whilst the former are, for at least ten months, civilians; and it not unfrequently happens that a man who was a good non-commissioned officer at one training, is found an indifferent one at the next, through having fallen into habits of intemperance and other causes, or he may have been imprisoned by the civil power; in fact, there are many reasons why it may be advisable for a commanding officer to send him to the ranks, and fill his place by a better man, and this without the commission of an offence that ought to be brought before a court-martial. But now there is a hard-and-fast law that the Commander-in-Chief and a court-martial alone have the power of reduction. If the former course be adopted, the training is probably nearly over before the order can be carried into effect, and meanwhile the Militia regiment is saddled with the services of an incompetent non-commissioned officer. In some Militia regiments, commanding officers made it a rule to dispense with the services of those non-commissioned officers who were absent, for two successive years, from the twenty-eight days' voluntary attendance at preliminary drill, without good reason; and this was an excellent plan, as there is no doubt that this preliminary training is very essential to make them efficient and fit for duty when the regiment assembles. Now, we fear, that courts-martial will be resorted to for trivial offences, not for the sake of the offence itself, but simply to reduce non-commissioned officers to the ranks. This will have the effect of preventing good men from coming forward for promotion, as few will care to have a court-martial recorded against them, when they can avoid it by remaining in the ranks. It was generally considered, before the new Act was passed, that the intention was to give commanding officers more power, but the contrary has really been the case. To delegate to a commanding officer the power of inflicting imprisonment for the number of days a man is absent without leave up to twenty-one, is simply nothing, for we imagine there are few regiments in the Service in which a man would escape court-martial who was absent over seven days.

The May promotions in the Austrian Army have given rise to a great deal of dissatisfaction. The complaints have become so loud as to cause some consternation, though for that matter unrestrained criticism has been for some time almost the order of the day. In the recent promotions, however, the officers concerned appear to have some cause for grumbling. They include 10 promotions to lieutenant-field-marshals, 16 to major-generals, and only 19 captains of infantry and rifles to majors. Of about 1,800 senior lieutenants of infantry, only 90 have been promoted to captaincies of the second class. The commissions of all those now promoted date from the year 1866, and the number of those left out in the cold at the recent advancements counts by hundreds. A service of from 15 to 20 years as subaltern is not a pleasant fact to contemplate, and under such conditions the expressions of dissatisfaction now becoming so unpleasantly loud are not to be wondered at. It will require radical remedies to infuse some movement into a stagnation that certainly has no equal in any other army, and thus remove a cause of just complaint.

The third annual dinner of retired officers of the Army and Navy residing in Canada was held lately at the Toronto Club, and though the number present was not so large as had been expected, the dinner was a great success. The chair was taken by Major Evans, late 16th Regiment, and Lieutenant Roberts, late R.N., occupied the vice-chair. The following gentlemen were present:—Colonel Harger, late 25th Regiment; Captain S. McGill, late Royal Canadian Rifles; Mr. W. R. Merritt, late 30th Regiment; Mr. A. Leith, late R.N.; Mr. G. F. Hagarty, late 47th Regiment; Mr. Geale Dickson, late 47th Regiment; Mr. P. H. Drayton, late 16th Regiment; Major Miligan, late Military Train; Captain G. Taylor, late 71st Regiment; Mr. H. J. Grasett, late 100th Regiment; Mr. W. A. Russell, late R.N.; Mr. H. Wickham, late R.N.; Mr. G. D. Dawson, late 47th Regiment.

The roughs are allowed at their sweet will to assemble in their thousands in Hyde Park for the purpose of listening to rabid disloyalty or blatant atheism, without any fears being expressed for the safety of the flowers and shrubs. The Volunteers, however, are not to be allowed to celebrate their twenty-first anniversary in Hyde Park, for fear that the decent people who would assemble to see the stirring sight should unintentionally do a little damage. This decision of the Authorities is, we think, a mistake, especially considering that to the Volunteers Hyde Park is classic ground, the century having commenced with a monster Volunteer review in our London Champ de Mars, and several others of a similar nature having taken place since. We are glad to find, however, that, though the use of Hyde Park is refused, the War Office are prepared to consider favourably any proposal for a review at another spot. We can imagine no place more suitable than Wimbledon. It is easily accessible from London, and the grounds sufficiently large for the purpose, as no manœuvres would, we imagine, be attempted.

The current number of the Voenni Sbornik, the organ of the Russian War Office, contains some interesting statistics respecting the Russian Army. At the commencement of the present year, the total number of men under arms in the Russian Empire was 1,111,218, divided into 843,536 infantry, 88,425 cavalry, 149,823 artillery, and 29,823 engineers. The total number of the field force was 724,276 troops. When the Army was demobilised in July, 1878, the regular force comprised 39,268 generals and staff and superior officers, 1,626,165 rank and file, and 244,641 horses. Between that date and January, 1879, as many as 443,017 men were passed into the Reserve, 238,444 of these belonging to the infantry. At the close of the Turkish war the Militia numbered 970,000, and was disbanded on the 31st July, 1878. The number of Turkish prisoners brought to Russia in 1877 and 1878 was 70,654, including therein 27 pashas and 4,087 officers. Of these, 11,717, or 1 in 7, died in Russia, largely owing to the ravages of typhus, brought on by bad food, bad accommodation, and want of clothing. In 1878 the Emperor conferred upon the Army 7,688 decorations (in this number 141 Orders of St. George), 7,659 medals, and money rewards amounting to 567,386 roubles. Promotions were granted in 1878 to 116 generals and 2,157 staff and superior officers. The pension fund, managed by the semi-official Alexander Committee, amounted to 17,566,299 roubles, or about £200,200.

It would be well if some military or other Member of Parliament interested in the Army would ask in the House the cause of delay in rewarding the officers of the Army for their late services in Afghanistan, as detailed by Sir F. Roberts in his despatches. In the good old days, rewards were announced immediately on the receipt of the despatch giving particulars of an action, and bore the date of the action, thus giving an éclat to the affair, which is now nearly forgotten before the looked-for gazette appears. In many cases, those who would have received some much-coveted distinction have passed away, either from the effects of their wounds or from disease contracted on service, ere the promotions are accorded in which they have participated. Some are found to throw the blame on the Horse Guards, but those who know anything of official life will exonerate that Department, which would only be too pleased to act could it do so.

The new French War Minister has been devoting great attention to the proper organisation of the Territorial Army, and one of his measures with regard to the superior officers of that force has given rise to a good deal of criticism. We may remind our readers that when the territorial regiments were first formed, considerable difficulty was experienced in providing them with proper staffs, the Government having but few old officers at its disposal. The consequence was that a large number of regiments were given to political adherents of local influence, and it is to destroy this state of affairs that General Farre has adopted a rather sweeping measure. He feels that it is necessary to bring the force in question up to the standard of the German Landwehr and Landsturm, and that to accomplish this task the territorials must be commanded by officers enjoying their confidence. "And how is it possible," exclaims a military writer, "to admit that officers who have never been in the service, invested suddenly with field rank, can impose their authority on old soldiers who are accustomed to serve under the orders of officers well up to their professional duties? How admit that old officers of the Active Army can serve without uneasiness and without feeling hurt, under colonels who at each moment betray their incompetence? Such a state of things is bad enough in days of peace, but its consequences would be perfectly disastrous in time of war." Since the creation of the territorial army, French legislators have provided the War Minister with a proper element for remedying this defect in the organisation of the "second line." They have reduced the period of service for officers, or age limit, on the condition of these officers remaining for a certain number of years in the territorial army. We do not see why this system should not be employed in England, both to quicken promotion in the active Army, and to give a greater military value to the Militia. It is complained, however, by the French Conservatives that the new Republican War Minister has superseded a large number of old officers upon purely political grounds, and this in the most uncourteous fashion. For example, among the officers removed is a Lieutenant-Colonel de Montvaillant, who served for 20 years in the active Army, passed nine years in Africa, was twice wounded and had a horse killed under him at Solferino, and was decorated after the Franco-German war. Another officer who has been broken is Lieutenant-Colonel Briet de Rainvilliers, who also saw service in Algeria, and had a horse killed under him at Sedan. A third officer is no less a person than the Marquis de Montebello, who, on leaving St. Cyr in 1856, joined the Chasseurs à pied in Algeria, where he at once distinguished himself. Although he had just had his leg broken by a kick from a horse, he had himself strapped on his charger, and took part in the battles of Palestro, Magenta, and Solferino. After the Italian war, with the authorisation of his Government, he visited those battle-fields in Russia and Germany where his celebrated grandfather, Marshal Lannes, had fought and bled. He also served for a time with the Russians in the Caucasus, and gained the decoration of St. Vladimir. In 1863, when an insurrection broke out in Algeria, the Marquis de Montebello exchanged into the Turcos, and passed five years in the Sahara and Kabylia. During the Franco-German war he was attached to the staff of General Trochu. The above examples will show that General Farre has been greatly influenced by political motives, and that the recent removals were not entirely dictated by zeal for the welfare of the service. However, what it concerns us most to remark is the progress which is being made in the organisation and efficiency of the second line of the French Army, which will soon be more solid and steady than the first line, and be entirely composed of old soldiers, between 30 and 40 years of age. The men of the territorial army have recently been out for training; there were hardly any defaulters, and discipline is reported to have been excellent. In fact, this force has now arrived at such a stage on the road to perfection, that it has been suggested the War Minister would do well to turn out a territorial division for the autumn manœuvres, and to work this division against a division of the active Army. It is not to be supposed, however, that the latter part of this suggestion, which might very easily lead to unfortunate results, will be adopted, for the French are much too excitable for such an experiment, which would be anywhere indulged in with diffidence. Nevertheless, it would, no doubt, be very gratifying for the French if they could see a territorial division simply take the field, and either work alone, or with a division of Regulars.

The Volunteer leaders have suffered yet another official snub. It is all very well for the Government to profess that a desire to protect the trees and plants from damage has influenced them in refusing the use of Hyde Park for the proposed review, but the excuse is altogether too lame a one. What has been allowed before surely could be allowed again! If reviews have been held in Hyde Park in previous years, how comes it that unsurmountable difficulties present themselves now? The fact is, we believe, feelings of economy have prompted the Government in the present instance. The review would necessarily entail some little expense, and the interests of the most wonderful and valuable movement of the present century are being sacrificed at the shrine of the great Liberal god,—petty economy.

The committee assembled by order of the United States Government on the subject of the Militia has drawn up a Bill for a National Militia organisation, which, it is said, will be laid before the House for its action. We have been favoured with a summary of its provisions. It provides for the enrolment, under State and Territorial laws, of all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of 13 and 45; the Militia to be divided into two classes,—the active, to be known as the National Guard, and the inactive, to be known as the Reserve Militia; the term of enlistment of the Active Militia to be not less than three years, and if called into the National Service, to continue till the end of the line of such call; the number of commissioned officers and enlisted men entitled to share in the national appropriation not to exceed 750 for each Congressional District and each Territory; the organisation of the Active Militia under State laws to conform as closely as the method prescribed for the Regular Army, as circumstances will permit; and when called into the service of the United States to be under the command of the President, and the numbers, rank, and duties of the Staff to be the same as prescribed for the Regular Army.

The speech of the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier to a French Parliamentary Commission on June 13, 1873, has become memorable. So important was it considered by our late Secretary of State for War, that he caused it to be printed in the shape of a small pamphlet and distributed throughout the ranks of the Army. Now, the whole aim and object of that speech was to expose the rottenness of condition observable in the French Army so far as regarded its matèriel of war, at the time when war was declared against Germany in 1870. "The cannons," he observed, "were of the time of Louis XIV. and the artillery of Gribeauval," the ammunition boots were of "paper," the guns (small arms) had, in many instances, "been condemned for sale as old iron," and the provisions were in a still more deplorable state. There were men in abundance, but neither clothes to cover them, arms to equip them, or food to satisfy their hunger. We notice, with feelings of the utmost regret, that the valuable lessons which should have been learned by our War-Office Authorities, in respect to these very serious points, have apparently been over-looked, at least in a very considerable number of instances. We speak more particularly in regard to the supplies of consumable and non-consumable stores proper which are procured by contract for service of the Army. It is customary now to take the lowest tender, be the price reasonable or unreasonably low,—in point of fact, quite irrespective of the possibility or impossibility of procuring the article at the price quoted. To give instances. The price of forage per ration has been brought down from about 1s. 10d. or 2s., which would be fair and remunerative prices, to 1s. 5d. and 1s. 4d., which are preposterously low. The price of meat has fallen as low as 6d. per lb. How is it possible that prime meat can be given to the troops under such conditions? The price of bread has been so reduced, that we understand it is a difficult thing to get men to tender for its supply at all; consequently, it is seldom really up to the mark. Wines, spirits, and malt liquors for the hospitals have been lowered in quality by the same demoralising process, until no respectable purveyor will come forward as a contractor. All this, however, would be easily adjusted by a system of rejecting all abnormally low tenders, and as it only affects consumable stores there would be no permanent harm done. But, unfortunately, the non-consumable stores are obtained in the same wretched manner. Blankets, sheets, and coverlets that at one time lasted for years are now replaced by flimsy, indifferent articles that show "daylight" through them after a couple of washings. In a lengthened European campaign, this would seriously affect the efficiency of an Army. To be well clothed, warmed, and fed is half the battle. The clothing is bad in many instances, shirts and drawers being inferior to the old ammunition articles procurable at the quartermaster's store in years gone by. What, however, can be expected when the lowest tender is invariably accepted, so long as the prospective contractor can procure a couple of extra signatures as guarantees? It is a mercy that our guns, rifles, and ammunition are not furnished on such terms! We understand that when the great 40-ton steam hammer was about to be erected at Woolwich Arsenal, three tenders were put in for it. The highest of these—that of Nasmyth, Wilson, and Co. (for £22,000)—was accepted, and wisely, too, for the others were ridiculously low. Why cannot the wisdom which dictated that this course showed be pursued be exercised in regard to the small matters of minor contracts? It is as essential in the one case as in the other. The efficiency of an armed force depends very materially upon the sufficiency and good quality of its equipment. We earnestly commend these remarks to the consideration of the War-Office Authorities. We confidently believe that the system of accepting the lowest tender has originated in a desire to promote healthy economy for the public benefit; but the idea may be carried too far, and the cheapest goods will not always in the long run prove to be the most economical.

The report just issued from the Army Medical Department, on the health of the troops in 1878, shows a great excess, compared with 1877, in the sickness, mortality, invaliding, and mean daily sick of the Army generally, which, however, has not extended to all the stations. In all these particulars, except the mortality, the proportion has been above the average of the preceding ten years; the deaths were 0·65 per 1,000 under that average. The most marked increase in the admissions into hospital, in comparison with 1877, took place in India, Mauritius, China, the Straits Settlements, and the Cape of Good Hope; and there was also the very heavy sick-rate of Cyprus to be added. The high death-rate occurred among the troops in Cyprus, at the Cape of Good Hope—from disease, not casualties in the field—in India, and at Mauritius. The results for the troops serving in the United Kingdom differ so little from those of the preceding year as scarcely to require notice. There has been a reduction of 0·67 per 1,000 of mean strength in the death-rate, which has only amounted to 6·53 per 1,000 during the year. The highest proportion of admissions into hospital occurred among the troops in the Home District, consisting almost entirely of the Household Brigade, and the cause of the great excess appears to have been venereal; next to it is the Channel Islands, where there was an excess of diseases of the respiratory and of the urinary systems. The Eastern District stands third, and in it those of the digestive and cutaneous systems were prominent. Very full information is given as to the results of the working of the Contagious Diseases Acts. It appears that in 1878 the admissions into hospital for primary venereal sores amounted to 40 per 1,000 at the fourteen stations under the Acts, while they were 131 per 1,000 at fourteen large stations not under the Acts, or 86 per 1,000 at all the stations in the United Kingdom, exclusive of those under the Acts. The prevalence of gonorrhœa in these groups amounted to 78, 121, and 82 per 1,000 of the strength respectively. These results fully bear out those published in previous volumes as to the beneficial influence of the Acts in reducing the most formidable of these diseases. From the table showing the mortality and invaliding of the different arms, we find that the highest ratio of admissions took place in the Foot Guards, and the lowest, omitting garrison staff and departments, in the Household Cavalry. The highest death-rate was in the Brigade Depôts (probably from the number of old soldiers with deteriorated constitutions from foreign service), and next to them the Artillery, while the lowest was in the Household Cavalry. The highest amount of invaliding was from the Cavalry of the Line, and the lowest from the Royal Engineers.

The losses of the German Army in the war of 1870-71 have been accurately determined by the official lists, drawn up with much care, for the several actions, as well as for the separate parts of the Army, leaving the number of those returned as "missing" extremely small. These losses may, therefore, be calculated with almost mathematical exactness. The same cannot, however, be said with regard to the losses of the French Army. In consequence of the Convention concluded between the French and German Governments, the remains of soldiers who fell in battle have been disinterred and deposited in the various churchyards. The German Government undertook that duty in Alsace-Lorraine, while the French authorities bound themselves to perform a like service in their several departments where actions were fought. Both Governments also pledged themselves mutually to maintain and keep in repair the various monuments erected in memory of the fallen. The order of the French Government of April 4, 1873, in accordance with which each department had to furnish a statement as to the number of burial-places within their boundaries of those who fell in the war, has had the result of supplying us with tolerable accurate statistics. They are published in the Journal Officiel, and contain data from thirty departments. The official report states that they, however, are not of a nature to be implicitly relied on, from the nature of the surrounding circumstances. The number of burial-places of those who fell in the Department of the Ardennes, in the battles of Beaumont and Sedan, for instance, is not known. It is further mentioned that 950 French soldiers were buried in the churchyard of Mainz, and that 18,000 were buried in the various German towns where they were interned. In the churchyard of Morsbrunn lie 400 French cuirassiers; in that of Metz, 8,000 men. In Switzerland 3,000 soldiers died, from the effects either of cold and exposure, or of their wounds. The number of French who died in Belgium is not known. Altogether, according to the returns supplied, 87,396 soldiers were buried in 1,438 different communes. Of these, 37,859 French and 21,876 German soldiers rest in separate graves; while of 27,661 buried, the nationality could not be determined.

Quite an epidemic of suicides is reported to be ravaging Tashkent, where, we learn, six officers of the garrison are officially reported to have killed themselves in one week. Suicides are painfully common throughout the entire military service of Russia, and particularly among officers serving on the confines of the Empire. The causes do not lie deep beneath the surface. The pay of the officers is poor, promotion is slow and impeded by intrigue, gambling is the rule everywhere, and habitual intoxication a merit rather than otherwise. Except at St. Petersburg and Moscow, no incentive is offered to an officer to devote his attention to the study of any branch of his profession, and even in the two capitals the authorities gag individuality to such a degree that no officer dare express or encourage views in opposition to those current in high quarters. As to life in the provincial towns, where there is no society except that of the unlettered, no clubs except a sort of mercantile assembly-rooms, devoted to dancing and card-playing, and no sport or athletics,—both being ignored in Russia,—the lazy routine and inactivity for officers are so oppressive that only a Russian could possibly put up with such an existence. If provincial Russia is bad, Turkestan is a hundred times worse. Sometimes the post does not arrive at Tashkent for a month. The only newspaper in the country is the Turkestanski Vedomosti, which is published once a week, and contains less news than the London Gazette. No amusements exist, and the only way the officers have of getting rid of their abundant leisure is to smoke, drink, and play at cards, and indulge in intrigue with the native women. Thanks to the morbid spirit engendered by this artificial and unwholesome existence, a Russian newspaper never appears without chronicling the death of some officer or other by his own rash hand.

Although such useful work was done by trained signallers in the Afghan and Zulu campaigns, little is being done at home to encourage this branch of military education. In some regiments the men under instruction are struck off duty whilst undergoing a course of training, but this is the only advantage they receive. As soon as they have acquired a competent knowledge of signalling, they return to duty, and speedily forget what they have learned. We have several times suggested that the serjeant-instructor and the regimental signallers (six in an infantry regiment) should be granted a small amount of extra-duty pay, and that every soldier who has been passed by the officer instructor should be allowed to wear cross-flags, worked on the arm, as a distinction, to enable him to be easily recognised as a signaller. Much has been done of late years to encourage soldiers to become good shots, and a musketry instructor is allowed extra pay for instructing them. Yet nothing has been done for the signallers and their instructor. The officer in charge of the signallers of a brigade does not even receive horse allowance, although his duties require him to be mounted.

A correspondent asks us a question which we find some difficulty in answering, viz., What steps it is right for a Volunteer regiment to take to get rid of an honorary colonel, who is generally considered to be unfit to hold his position? Our correspondent points to a case in which "the honorary colonel of a regiment has gone to the utmost limit of bad-breeding, by inviting the officers of his regiment to his house, and then denying himself to the whole of them without excuse or apology. He has systematically neglected to answer letters addressed to him on regimental matters, and in other ways lowers the rank he holds in the eyes of officers and men." Now, the War Office ought in such a case to strengthen the hands of the commanding officer. There is no telling the injury which the presence of such an honorary colonel will cause in a force, the discipline of which depends almost entirely upon the proper feeling which should exist throughout the subordinate ranks. If an honorary colonel, having shown himself so utterly ignorant as to what is due from an officer of his rank and position, has not the good-sense to resign his commission voluntarily, the War Office should step in, and place power in the hands of the commanding officer to get rid of him. No lieutenant-colonel having the interests of his regiment and the Service at heart, can be expected to look with favour upon one who has committed serious breaches of etiquette. The Regulations, as they stand, however, are not framed to meet a case of the kind.

As there appears to be considerable misapprehension regarding the meaning of the words "on duty," when applied to tasks imposed upon the military, the Commander-in-Chief in India has lately caused a general order to be issued in which the term "on duty," as used in the 77th and 78th Articles of War, includes any military duty which a soldier may be called on to perform. A soldier on parade, or on a line of march, by order of his superior officer, is considered "on duty," and should, in case of drunkenness, be charged accordingly. The "line of march" is to be held as meaning the whole march, including all halts, and not merely the hours each day when the troops are actually moving. A soldier who is drunk "for duty," that is, after he has been warned for a specific duty, such as a guard or orderly, for which a roster is kept, shall be considered as drunk "on duty." Sir Frederick Haines acted wisely in setting at rest all doubts on the subject, for there exists much misapprehension, and many an officer and man run the risk of committing a breach of discipline unintentionally.

INDIA.

Col. P. S. Cunningham, Madras S.C., is about to retire on a pension of £456 6s., and capitalised value of special annuity, £7,038.

The appointment held by Admiral Bythesea, Consulting Naval Officer to the Government of India, has been abolished. It is stated that the abolition of the post is in direct opposition to the advice of the Government of India.

The Government have decided, on financial grounds, against the recommendation of the Army Commission to form three new regiments of Guides.

The rank of Brigdr.-Gen. has been conferred on Col. T. Nuttall, recently appointed to command the Cavalry Brigade of the 2nd Bombay Division, Candahar Field Force.

Major Daniell is at last obliged to take leave to England on medical certificate. He has had a great deal of exposure lately in hunting down the dacoits, and we do not wonder that he finds the need of rest now. We hardly understand the fact that Major Daniell has had no honour or reward conferred upon him, for the gallantry displayed by him in the capture of Wassudeo and several other leaders of the dacoits. Men who have not done a tenth part of his service have been loaded with honours, while he seems likely to be left out in the cold.

Brigdr.-Gen. R. C. Stewart, half-pay, late 2nd Foot, is en route to India in the P. and O. Company's steamer Deccan, to assume his brigade command in Madras.

One of the last acts of Sir F. Roberts before giving up the supreme command at Cabul was to convey the Commander-in-Chief's congratulations to Gen. Macpherson and Col. Jenkins. The following is the order issued by the Lieut.-Gen.:—"It affords the Lieut.-Gen. much pleasure to publish the following telegram from the Commander-in-Chief in India, expressing his Excellency's satisfaction at the manner in which the operations on April 25, at Charasiab, were conducted by Brigdr.-Gen. Macpherson, C.B., V.C., and Col. Jenkins, C.B., A.D.C. Col Jenkins's disposition on finding the numbers of the enemy increasing was most masterly, and the rapidity with which Gen. Macpherson reinforced Col. Jenkins and assisted that officer to drive off the enemy is deserving of all praise. Sir Frederick Roberts thoroughly appreciates the good work performed by the troops, and begs that they will all accept his hearty congratulations." The following is the telegram referred to:—"Col. Jenkins's action at Charasiab was admirably fought. Congratulate him and his troops on my behalf, also Gen. Macpherson and his troops, who so promptly and effectually supported."

Now that Sir Frederick Roberts hasbeen relieved of the Cabul command, he will probably take furlough to Europe. So, at least, the Civil and Military Gazette is informed on good authority. Whatever mistakes Sir Frederick may have committed in the course of his Afghan career—one of the most eventful in Indian history—it is certain that he will bear away with him a high reputation for energy and gallantry. And few Generals have been more thoroughly well liked by the men and officers under their command than Sir Frederick Roberts.

According to letters from India, the report of Sir Frederick Haines's resignation of the chief military command in that country does not rest upon good foundation, and Sir Frederick proposes retaining the appointment till his five years' tenure expires, on April 10 next. The statements regarding his successor may therefore be considered premature. It is also understood that Sir Neville Chamberlain, although not in satisfactory health, will retain the Madras command until next February, when his term of office expires. Sir Donald Stewart, commanding the British forces in Afghanistan, has been designated as Sir Neville's successor. The Bombay command will likewise probably be vacant in October of next year by the return home of Lieut.-Gen. Warre.

The Indian Government have published, through the Press Commissioner's Office, the following list of the money offers made by the native chiefs in connection with military operations in Afghanistan:—The Maharajah and Maharanee of Baroda, 10,000 rs., for the support of the families of the Guides who died in defending the Cabul Residency last September; Maharajah Holkar, 5,000 rs., for the same purpose, or towards a memorial in honour of the defence; the Maharajah of Bulrampore, one lac, to provide allowances for the families of the native soldiers killed in action, and to be distributed in prizes among the Sepoys distinguished for gallantry; the Nawab of Rampore, one lac, in aid of the sick and wounded soldiers, British and Native; Thakoor Pertub Rude Singh and Oude Taloombar, 400 rs., for the families of the killed. These donations have been accepted with cordial thanks. Besides the above, a subscription of 2,888 rs. was raised by the people of the Furruckabad District for the purchase of warm clothing for the troops.

The Secretary of the Indian Medical Service Defence Committee in London desires to explain that in consequence of the haste with which it was necessary to send out the first reports of the deputation to Lord Hartington, a mistake was made in saying that Sir Joseph Fayrer, M.D., "accompanied the deputation." This was not the case, for he was present in his official capacity, and by desire of Lord Hartington.

THE ROYAL CAMBRIDGE ASYLUM.

The 29th annual general court of the friends and supporters of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows was held on the 31st ult., at the Royal United Service Institution, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon in the chair. Col. J. Ainslie Stewart, the secretary, read the report of the committee, which stated that there were at present 55 widows in the asylum, and it was proposed to elect four on the present occasion by ballot. The committee were adding 12 inmates' rooms. When completed the building would contain 70 widows. The cost of making the addition would be nearly £3,000, and not more than half was subscribed. The chairman thought it was unnecessary to dilate on the claims of such an institution. The aim of the society was that there should be a widow in the asylum from every regiment and battalion in the Service. Unfortunately, the period had not yet arrived when they could do so much. He regretted that their expenditure in the past year had exceeded their income. They could not rely on receiving more than £617, to meet an annual outlay of £2,500. It would be a great slur on the people of this country if the widows of our soldiers should be the only class in the country who were neglected and uncared for. The report was adopted on the motion of General M'Murdo, seconded by Major-General Renny. Resolutions were afterwards passed re-electing the retiring members of the committee. On the motion of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, seconded by General Sir H. C. B. Daubeney, a vote of thanks was passed to the chairman, and the proceedings terminated.

A military tournament and assault-of-arms is to be held from the 21st to the 26th inst. at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. The competitions, which are 53 in number, are to be open to all the regiments within range, and the profits are to be given in aid of the funds of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows.

ORDERLY-ROOM CLERKS.

"Scribe" writes:—"Returns have been called for from regiments and corps, showing the ages and service of serjeants and corporals promoted to these ranks during the past two years; also of serjeants transferred to the Army Reserve and Auxiliary Forces, which, I presume, are to show what effect the short-service system has had upon non-commissioned officers. As this return is certain to be the means of causing the authorities to make alterations to induce non-commissioned officers to remain with the colours, I take this opportunity of advancing the claims of a hard-worked class. Although I have observed letters from almost every other rank, not a complaint has come from the orderly-room clerks. It must not, however, be inferred that they are satisfied with their present position, and I am sure no one who knows anything of the Service can say they are not deserving of more encouragement than they receive. They commence with the pay of a serjeant, and after three years in the appointment receive an increase of 6d. per diem; but no real alteration is made in their classification. After another two years they receive the pay of a quartermaster-serjeant, but they still remain where they were as regards rank and standing. I am afraid it will be difficult to get non-commissioned officers to accept the appointments in future, because, in the first place, men who are educationally qualified for them would be certain of being appointed colour-serjeants in less than three years if they remained at their duty, and then they would have the extra remuneration given by captains, in addition to the sixpence given by the State; and secondly, the position is not considered so exalted as that of a colour-serjeant. I do not see why these non-commissioned officers should not be placed on an equal footing with the military staff clerks."

ARMY ORGANISATION.

"An Outsider" writes:—"Hoping that the Infantry regiments are not to remain in their present straggling and sprawling state as regards their numbering and county titles, I venture to submit a scheme for adjusting their arrangement. I believe that the two-battalion regiment, with a permanently localised depôt (capable of being expanded, when both battalions are on foreign service, into a third or provisional battalion), is the proper thing for the British Service; but at present, where two single-battalion regiments differing in county titles and colour of facings are linked together, things do not work well. The sixty senior regiments will retain their numbers, but some of their localities will be changed, viz:—

1st	Regiment	from	Berwickshire, &c.	to	Lanarkshire
8th	—	—	Lancashire	—	Derbyshire
25th	—	—	Yorkshire	—	Berwickshire, &c.
36th	—	—	Worcestershire	—	Durham
46th	—	—	Cornwall	—	Yorks, W. R.
53rd	—	—	Shropshire	—	Lancashire
54th	—	—	Derbyshire	—	Leinster
55th	—	—	Cumberland	—	Lancashire
56th	—	—	Essex	—	Ulster
58th	—	—	Northampton	—	Staffordshire

The next ten regiments become second battalions of 28th, 40th*, 45th*, 58th*, 59th*, 49th, 37th, 36th*, 41st, and 31st respectively. Those marked (*) are changes.

83rd and 86th	—	—	—	63rd	—
87th and 88th	—	—	—	64th	—
92nd and 93rd	—	—	—	65th	—

The other regiments to be put in as second battalions as near to the present arrangement as possible, but with due regard to their past history and colour of facings. The 100th (Prince of Wales's Royal Canadian) Regiment will be left to itself, its depôt being at Cork. No doubt it will be able to recruit for itself in the old fashion, and maybe the time is not far distant when it will become a Canadian regiment in reality; its number must be dropped. Changes in linking of battalions:—

* 84th	—	—	46th	—	Yorks W.R.
* 89th	—	—	56th	—	Ulster.
95th	—	—	34th	—	Cumberland.
96th	—	—	44th	—	Essex.
99th	—	—	30th	—	Lancashire.
109th	—	—	48th	—	Northampton.

The grouping of small counties to remain as at present, excepting that the 16th is to belong to Bedford or Huntingdon only, allowing Hertford to own the 49th in conjunction with Berkshire. The 24th is to belong to Cardigan, Radnor, Brecknock, and Montgomery, taking the latter Welsh county from the 43rd, which is to belong to Shropshire and Monmouth. The three-cornered brigade at Leicester is to be changed to two distinct regimental depôts. One regiment is abstracted from Lancashire, but the 46th is to be made common to Yorks West Riding and Lancashire, and bear the title of the present 84th. Uniforms of the two single-battalion regiments, forming the new two-battalion regiments, will be assimilated, the colour of facings of senior regiment being adopted, excepting where the junior regiment has the royal blue. Achievements and badges will be clubbed, excepting that the 94th and 96th will drop the achievements they have lately improperly borrowed from the old "Scots brigade" and "Queen's Germans." 73rd and 90th have to come out of Scotland, to make room for the repatriation of 25th. 74th to lose Highland designation and plaids on becoming 2nd Batn. of Cameronians. 71st and 78th to conform either by both being kilted or wearing trews,—the latter, I should think, is best.

New Arrangement of Infantry Regiments.—The words in italics would not be on colours, but would be in Army List and other official documents. The bracketted numbers shew what the second battalion is formed from.

Mr. John S. Harper, storekeeper at the Naval establishment, Trincomalee, for the last fifteen years, has been retired. A gratifying event terminated his career in the Service of nearly half a century by the presentation of an address by the native employés and others, who arrayed themselves in robes and turbans of the gayest colours for the occasion. Mr. Harper carries with him the wishes of all.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards. The name of Mr. J. A. Bloxam, late Assist.-Surg., was inadvertently omitted from the list of those who attended the late regimental dinner. The handsome fountain erected by command of the Queen in memory of the late Gen. Sir Thomas Biddulph is now finished, and forms a prominent object on the road between the Victoria and Chain Bridges over the Dee at Balmoral. It is built of rough and hewn granite, and bears the following inscription :—"To the honoured memory of Sir Thomas Middleton Biddulph, K.C.B., P.C. This fountain is erected by Queen Victoria, in grateful and affectionate remembrance of his faithful services to the Queen and Royal Family for 27 years. Born, July 27, 1809. Died, Sept. 28, 1878." The fountain is in the form of an arch, and a constant supply of water from the Dee runs into a trough of polished granite.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The squadron stationed at Heidelberg held an athletic meeting on April 22. The inhabitants of the village availed themselves of the opportunity to present a purse of fifteen guineas to the men of the detachment, accompanied by a letter stating the pleasure they had enjoyed from witnessing their performances at various evening entertainments, concluding by wishing success to the athletic club of the squadron. The different events on the programme were then contested, with the following results :—100 yards' race—Pte. Webb, 1; Pte. Gordon, 2. One mile race—Pte. Fielding, 1; Pte. Parker, 2. Non-commissioned officers' race—Corpl. Penton, 1; Corpl. Williams, 2. High jump—Pte. Bond, 1. Hurdle race—Pte. Gordon, 1; Pte. Almond, 2. Three-legged race—Ptes. Fielding and Hanlon, 1. Half-mile race—Pte. Dean, 1; Pte. Byrne, 2. Sack race—Pte. McPheley, 1. Tug-of-war between B and G Troops—G Troop won. Bucket race—Pte. Willis, 1. Quarter-mile race—Pte. McPheley, 1; Pte. Hanlon, 2. Mr. C. Hope-Henderson-Roe, late sub-lieut., has been appointed 2nd Lieut. in the 1st Sussex Artillery Volunteers.

4th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Pope, late adjt. of the Cheshire Yeomanry, is to be brought on to the establishment to fill the first vacancy which may occur amongst the captains, when he will return to regimental duty from the staff of Major-Gen. J. B. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., at Aldershot.

4th Hussars. No orders have yet been received at Shorncliffe for the removal of the regiment to Aldershot. A correspondent complains that we have treated the regiment unfairly in stating that it is unfit to go to Aldershot. We certainly had no desire to wound the feelings of Col. Moore and his officers when we recommended that the regiment should be given a little longer time to pull itself together before proceeding to our tactical station. All we desired to do was to point out the dangers of the course which some have suggested, and although the 4th were specially mentioned, we did not wish it to be supposed that the regiment is in a worse condition than any other cavalry corps of its standing on the roster under the present system of short service. It was against a dangerous practice that we considered it necessary to write, and though we much regret that the officers of the 4th Hussars have considered that our articles have reflected unfavourably upon them and their regiment, we still adhere to our original opinion that it is a great mistake to send a cavalry regiment to Aldershot, with its ranks full of recruits, and put it under canvas, where the men naturally get somewhat out of hand, hard as the commanding officer and troop officers may strive to keep them under control.

6th Dragoons. Capt. M'Kean, aide-de-camp to Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. F. Maude, V.C., K.C.B., in India, has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

8th Hussars. A correspondent writing from Cabul says :—"Gen. Stewart is sending back three batteries of artillery, also the 8th Hussars from the Cabul Force."

10th Hussars. Capt. Liddell is to be allowed to retain his appointment as adjt. of the Cavalry Depôt at Canterbury, to complete five years' service. He was appointed in July, 1876.

11th Hussars. Brevet Major Rivett-Carnac is now en route to India, to take up his appointment as Military Secretary to Gen. Warre at Bombay, having embarked at Venice in the P. and O. Company's steamer Deccan this week.

17th Lancers. The Irish Times states that Capt. Duke, who lately arrived in England on the close of the Zulu campaign, does not proceed to India to rejoin his regiment, he having applied for appointment to a Yeomanry adjutancy.

20th Hussars. The following announcement appears in Indian General Orders :—"Capt. (Lieut.-Col. in 20th Hussars) F. Chenevix-Trench, to have the position of Major in the cadre of the late 2nd Eur. Light Cavalry, from Feb. 25, 1880, vice Major (Lieut.-Col. in 20th Hussars) J. C. Lockwood, retired on half-pay."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieuts. R. L. S. Vassall, 5th Brig., and C. W. M. Lane, 8th Brig., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Lieut. G. F. A. Norton, 9th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for four months, on urgent private affairs.

Major-Gen. H. P. de Tessier (late Bengal) has been admitted to colonel's allowances from Feb. 26 last, vice Gen. A. Huyshe, deceased.

A correspondent writes from Cabul on May 4 :—"Capts. Freeth and Corbett, R.A., proceed to India to-morrow on sick-leave; the latter to England for one year."

Major F. A. Whinyates, A Brig. R.H.A., who has been suffering from the effects of exposure to the sun while on active service, has been granted an extension of his leave of absence to July 31 for the re-establishment of his health.

The 1st (Capt. F. Archer), for Halifax, N.S. Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men were delighted with the accommodation provided, and with the great courtesy and kindness they experienced from all on board, from Capt. Archer downwards. The ship has the reputation of being the smartest on the line. Halifax was reached on Saturday, May 22, and on the Monday three companies, the 1st Detachment, 4th, and 26th, paraded with the garrison for the Queen's Birthday parade, under the command of Capt. Jelf, R.E.

Col. Gordon has, in a private letter, given some further explanations regarding his resignation of the post of private secretary to the Viceroy of India. 21st Fusiliers. Major Cook, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for four months, on urgent private affairs. A correspondent sends the following letter to the Times of India :—"Pretoria, April 1, 1880.—About three months ago the public were informed through the columns of your largely circulated newspaper how an inspection of the Infantry troops stationed here was made by his Excellency Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley. How he expressed himself satisfied with the cleanliness and smartness of the men, which expression of satisfaction could but mean that, for the few days they had been at comparative rest, they had lost no time in changing the ragged, weary-looking warrior of Dec. 22 into the red-coated, clean-faced soldier. Good, new, well-made clothing are very desirable indeed, but these having been secured and given to those who require them, much still remains to be done before you have the smart, well-shaped appearance of a soldier. And a task of no ordinary difficulty is set before those upon whom responsibility rests, to polish the rough points of appearance of 600 men—and, by untiring exertions, to bring the number I have mentioned to such perfection that every movement is performed with such correctness as that the keenest observer cannot discern the least hitch. I am sure it is unnecessary to say that the 21st Regiment coming into Pretoria was, to use a common expression, completely pulled asunder. Marching, if I may say, night and day for nine months over a tract of country which baffles any description which suggests itself to me. Consequently, the men were out of shape. And so, I say, the task of converting their appearance and movements into what they should be, was a task of enormous magnitude set before those appointed for that purpose. So, with willing minds on every side, it was commenced early in January, and cool hours for drill were selected by Lieut.-Col. Hazlerigg, and with the assistance of his efficient adjutant and hard-working serjeant-major, with non-commissioned officers whose exertions were untiring aid, the regiment progressed towards perfection, till on this evening they were again ordered out for inspection by his Excellency Sir G. Wolseley, previous to his departure from the Transvaal. So, at 4.45 p.m., the Royal Scots were formed up at the place appointed, the dress being drill order, with helmets; and I might here remark that, to the eye, a nicer or more sightly head-dress could not be selected for a soldier. Punctually at the appointed time, Sir Garnet arrived on the ground. For myself, I would say a smarter, cleaner, neater (or in movements a more easy and graceful) lot of young fellows I never expected to see together, responding to every word of command from their gallant leader with a precision which would do credit to any corps at home for many years. No wonder Sir Garnet said again and again, 'Well done, well done!' No wonder when a severe test had been concluded (lasting for two hours) that Lieut.-Col. Hazlerigg was so highly complimented on the regiment under his command, which expressions of praise he so gladly conveyed to his men and officers in the dusk of the evening, before dismissing them off parade."

A braver or better officer could not easily be found in the Army. In the last Blue-book frequent testimony is borne by Gen. Crealock and Sir Garnet Wolseley to the admirable services rendered by this officer, both at Ginginhlovo and Fort Chelmsford, and subsequently in command of the flying column that returned into Natal by the Middle Drift. The professional difficulties connected with his acceptance of the appointment have probably been overcome, to the great benefit of all South Africa." The Standard says :—"Capt. A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writes:—"The appointment of Major White, of the 92nd Highlanders, to be Military Secretary to the new Viceroy is quite unexceptionable. Beyond being a most gallant soldier, White is a man of brains and books; with good looks, good manners, and a good estate in Ireland. Royal Cornwall Rangers. At the inspection, held at Bodmin at the close of the annual training, Col. Montgomery expressed himself as highly pleased with the manner in which the regiment turned out, considered the march-past exceedingly steady, and that the general bearing and discipline of the men reflected great credit on the officers. Col. Montgomery also mentioned that H.R.H. the Prince of Wales (the hon. colonel) was particularly struck with the smartness of the regiment at the review of Treliske. The captains were called out to drill the battalion, and the subalterns to drill the company, and the manner in which they acquitted themselves was highly creditable. The officers present at the inspection were Lieut.-Col. Sir J. St. Aubyn, Bart., M.P., Major E. St. Aubyn, Capt. and Hon. Major Andrew, Capts. Hon. C. Eliot, Sir W. Onslow, Bart., J. D. Kilkenny Fusiliers. This regiment, under command of Col. St. George, assembled at Kilkenny on the 31st ult. for its annual training, numbering in all 3 field-officers, 7 captains, 11 subalterns, 1 adjutant, 1 quartermaster, 2 surgeons-major, 6 staff serjeants, 26 serjeants, 8 drummers, and 768 rank and file. The men are quartered in the Military Barracks, which have been found insufficient to accommodate the entire regiment; consequently, tents have been pitched within the barrack grounds for the remainder. The following officers are present, viz.:—Col. St. George; Lieut.-Col. Sir J. Langrishe, Bart.; Major Neville; Capts. Morris-Wall, Hely, Cahill, Thacker, Stannard, Sutherland, and Butler; Lieuts. Capt. Turner, 2nd Royal Cheshire Militia, writes from The Woodlands, near Stockport:—"I wish to draw the attention of Militia officers to the fact that a Militia team will this year, for the first time, have an opportunity of competing in one of the matches at the Wimbledon meeting of the National Rifle Association. The Donegal Cup competition is the one I allude to, and it has hitherto been confined to the Regular Army and the Volunteers. Teams are now to be allowed from the Navy and the Militia. The conditions are 12 men a side, with Martini-Henry rifles; seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards. As an old Wimbledon competitor, I shall be most happy to do all I can to assist in organising a team from the Militia; and I hope that adjutants, officers, and instructors of musketry will endeavour to arrange for some of the best shots in their regiments being sent to the Wimbledon meeting, so that we may be well represented."

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

A correspondent writes from Sheffield:—"More than 20 years ago, I offered some suggestions which, at the present moment, may not be out of place, and which I am induced to renew since reading Col. Thesiger's remarks when recently inspecting the 1st West York Yeomanry. He said, 'The 2nd Squadron were mostly mounted on ponies.' Firstly,—Allow no horse in a regiment of Yeomanry which would not be passed for a regular cavalry regiment; and to commence. In the first place, on a certain day order the veterinary-surgeon to make an inspection of the horses in a certain locality, and cast all horses unfit for the work; then let the owners either supply fresh ones, or retire. How can men do their duty when their horses are unfit for theirs? Better have an efficient regiment of 250, than a mob of 600 mounted enthusiasts Secondly,—Again, at such stations as Sheffield, Birmingham, Manchester, &c., where artillery or cavalry are stationed (with riding-schools attached), let such as like attend with their horses at certain periods, and receive instruction gratis. So much for the horse,—now for the men. Thirdly,—Let the surgeon pass no man who is unfit for the duties of a cavalry soldier; the country cannot afford play-toys just for the gratification of certain individuals who desire to be tricked out as cavalry soldiers. Fourthly,—On a man joining a regiment of Yeomanry, compel him to go through a course of instruction in riding, and until he has a certificate, don't allow him to parade with his regiment. In six months he should be readily able to pass any examination laid down, and some little pressure like this would act as an incentive to exertion. Something of this kind adopted would speedily make our Yeomanry as efficient and valuable as the other branches of our Volunteers, infantry, artillery, and engineers. In conclusion, I will just ask a simple question. Take one of our Regular cavalry regiments (say, 450 strong), what is the very least number of Yeomanry (on their undrilled horses) would it take to disorganise the whole?"

THE VOLUNTEERS.

3rd London Rifles. We give insertion with much pleasure to the following letter, which will have the effect of at once removing any impression which may have existed in the minds of our correspondents, that the conduct of the men of the regiment off duty, to which reference has been made, was due to want of care or proper precaution on the part of the regimental authorities, who undoubtedly deserve great credit for the promptitude with which they have acted:—"Head-quarters, 79 Farringdon Street, June 9, 1880.—Sir,—In view of the serious charges made by you in your issue of the 5th inst., against the good character and discipline of the 3rd London Rifles, allow me to request that you will inform me of the place and hour at which you saw 'over 100 of my men in broad daylight slouch past a field-officer of another regiment in full uniform without one of them making the slightest attempt at saluting.' Also of the place where you met 20 of the men, and the particulars of their misconduct, which you describe as 'reflecting the utmost disgrace upon the whole Service.' This is the first occasion during 14 years that I have had the honour to command the regiment that any reflections have been made upon its good conduct and I ask for the above information to facilitate the regimental inquiry I have ordered respecting the irregularities which you assert came under your personal observation. As to your adoption of the opinions of your correspondents of the want of care in the acceptance of recruits by the commanding officers of the 2nd and 3rd City of London Volunteers, I beg to state that I have refused, since Jan. 1 last, more than 70 men for my regiment, in consequence of their inability to furnish the references of respectability exacted by me from all applicants for enrolment.—I have the honour to be, Sir, &c., Robt. P. Laurie, Lieut.-Col. commandant, commanding 3rd London Rifles."

2nd Middlesex Rifles, under command of Lieut.-Col. Lord Ranelagh, underwent a most creditable inspection on Saturday last, at the hands of Col. Gipps, Scots Guards, turning out, as it ever does, in strong force, and manœuvring with that steadiness and precision which have made a name for the South Middlesex throughout the kingdom.

19th Surrey Rifles. Major R. W. Ray addresses to us the following letter:—"Having been placed in command of the above corps through the resignation of Lieut.-Col. V. H. Labrow (sent to the War Office, but not yet gazetted), I beg to call your attention to an article in your Gazette of June 5. I feel assured that you have inserted this under some wrong impression, and that you would not wish to injure what you justly term one of the best regiments in the county of Surrey. Therefore I write to correct such an impression, and to state that the regiment is open to any inquiry, and will bear comparison with any Metropolitan or Surrey corps." We are glad to find that the 19th Surrey has succeeded in weathering the storm, and we feel convinced that in Major Ray's hands the regiment will lose none of its former prestige.

23rd Middlesex (Inns of Court) Rifles. The regiment has been encamped throughout the week in the Old Deer Park, Richmond. The regiment marched in on Saturday afternoon, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Bulwer, Q.C.

The annual meeting of the National Artillery Association was held on Thursday at the Royal United Service Institution, Col. Earl Percy, M.P., president of Council, in the chair. The secretary read the annual report, which referred with satisfaction to an improvement in the competitive practice last year at Shoeburyness, especially in the 10-inch gun competition. No fewer than eight detachments out of 34 scored full points for hits and, with one exception, all were within the ten minutes allowed for the three rounds with the heavy ordnance. The repository competitions (mounting and unmounting guns, and carrying out the general hard work of artillerymen), as well as the results of the 64-pounder and 40-pounder (Armstrong) competitions, showed that most satisfactory progress had been made by the Volunteers. In the important matters of drill and discipline, the detachments attending the camp at Shoeburyness had maintained the reputation earned in previous years, and the Council congratulated the members on the very favourable reports of the commandant of the School of Gunnery and the camp-commandant on these vital points. The financial position of the Association was satisfactory; the accounts, presented with the report, showed a balance in hand of £195. The Council proposed to make the prize list equal in value to that of last year. t he camp at Shoeburyness for this year would open on The 31st prox. for the 1st Division, and on August 7 for the 2nd Division, closing on August 12, official sanction having been given to these dates.

The final reply of the War-Office authorities respecting the site of the proposed review was considered yesterday by a full meeting of commanding officers, over which Viscount Ranelagh presided. The Volunteer officers, after a reconsideration of such other sites as are available, passed the following resolution, which may be regarded as settling the question in a sense opposite to that desired by the Volunteers and the public:—"That this meeting, after further and fully considering the communications received from the War-Office authorities, adheres to the former resolution that Hyde Park is the only suitable place for holding a review of the character proposed in celebration of the twenty-first year of the existence of the Volunteer force; and this meeting expresses deep regret that her Majesty's Government is unable to afford the necessary facilities for holding the proposed review in Hyde Park." Among the officers present was the commanding officer of an Artillery corps from Northumberland, who would have been able to parade a large proportion of his me.. in Hyde Park, but would not be able to induce a fourth of them to undertake to parade elsewhere.

The Indian Army.

Young is a cousin of Capt. Young, who was wounded at Charasiab, and of Lieut. W. H. Young, 21st Punjab Infantry, whose conduct at Shuturgardan was so highly praised.

1st Bengal N.I. A shocking tragedy took place in the lines of the regiment on May 4, when one of the men shot dead one of his comrades and wounded three others, and providentially missed the Colonel, who had repaired to the lines on hearing the shots. On coming on the scene he ordered the assassin to be shot down at once, which was done by the men of the regiment, as he was shooting at everyone that came in his way. The murderer was a poorbeea, and said to be insane. Lieut.-Col. W. H. Mackesy, Bengal S.C., has been appointed officiating second-in-command during the absence, on furlough, of Major G. Atkins; and Major H. O. Cumberlege, wing-officer 39th Bengal N.I., officiates as wing-commander, vice Major G. R. Grylls, on furlough.

1st Madras N.I. The Madras Mail says:—"As it is upwards of six months since the three regiments forming the Madras Brigade left this Presidency, it may interest some of our readers to know how they have stood the climate and cold of the north. We therefore give, as far as we know, a brief account of their doings since they left, on Oct. 7, 8, and 11 last. The railway journey of fourteen days was well got over. One regiment had three cases of cholera in the train, and each regiment lost a man on the march from Jhelum. The 1st Regiment went to Kohat where it remained till Jan. 1, when it marched to Peshawur, remained there a week or so, and then by forced marches joined the columns under Gen. Doran, which left Lundi Kotal for the Kam Dacca affair. After this was over, the regiment went to Dacca for two months, and then on to Jellalabad. The 4th marched from Jhelum to Ali Musjid, and there relieved the 2nd Bengal N.I. The 4th was upwards of two months at this unhealthy place, but after its two months' sojourn there marched to Jellalabad with scarcely a man sick. From this place the regiment has been to Dours, &c., and furnished detachments at Rosabad and Fort Battye. The regiment is very healthy. The 15th marched from Jhelum to Peshawur, which is not the healthiest station in India, was kept there two months doing garrison duty, and furnishing detachments at Jumrood and Michnee. From Peshawur the regiment went to Lundi Kotal, and from thence to Dacca, Bhorawul, Pesh Potak. Many persons having the idea that Madrassees had no stamina and are of poor physique, thought that they would suffer much from the climate and cold, and that the mortality would be great. It turns out, however, that the Madras Sepoys have been more healthy than those of the other Presidency. We have before us the return of one of the regiments, which shows that since the arrival of the corps north only one man has died, none have been sent away on sick-leave, and after a six months' residence out of its own Presidency, the regiment had only one man sick in hospital on the 11th ult.'

27th Madras N.I. The Governor-General of India has been pleased to admit Subadar Syed Emam to the second-class of the Order of British India, with the title of "Bahadur."

29th Madras N.I. Capt. J. J. Fletcher died at the residence of his father, The Beeches, Upper Norwood, on the 31st ult., aged 39 years.

11th Bombay N.I. Lieut. A. Wapshare, adjt., has been granted leave to England for eighteen months, on medical certificate.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A LIEUTENANT.—The Naval Artillery Volunteers undoubtedly have the precedence, as representing the Senior Service.

CAPTAIN, R.N.—We shall be only too pleased to insert any information you may forward respecting the movements of your ship, and you will see that unless some correspondent or the Admiralty give us this information, it is impossible for us to know what you are doing

ON-LOOKER AND LUBRICATOR.—Your letters will be inserted next week.

UMPIRE.—A depôt is composed, as a rule, of non-effectives—men either being prepared for, or who have been invalided from, the service troops or companies of a regiment. A detachment, on the other hand, is made up of effective men, and is formed by some component part of a regiment. The officer referred to is commanding a depôt undoubtedly, not a detachment.

RIFLE VOLUNTEER.—A commanding officer need not necessarily give promotion by strict seniority, and the officer you refer to has no substantial cause of grievance.

SENEX.—The Horse Guards' authorities are actuated by a praiseworthy desire to do justice, but they, unfortunately, have to depend upon the Treasury for the funds to enable them to meet the difficulty.

REGULAR READY.—The 7th Dragoon Guards were relieved by the 3rd Dragoon Guards in that year.

FELKIRK.—We will ascertain.

C. W.—We cannot undertake to give the addresses of officers.

LET us suppose that the British troops have been permitted to evacuate Afghanistan without trouble, and that they are all safe and sound within our own borders; that Abdurrahman is seated on the musnud of Cabul, and that a Russian Embassy has reached his capital, and has been received with distinction, whilst a British representative lingers in vain on the frontier, and is at last told to go about his business,—what, we may ask, will the Government of India and the Government of Great Britain consider it necessary to do? The position is not only conceivable, but it is likely enough if Russia be inclined to cause annoyance, and there is no reason to think that she has any special reason to desire our comfort and peace. If any one will turn to the Despatches of the Duke of Wellington, and will read the minute directions which that great soldier considered it necessary to give for the evacuation of France by the allied troops after the necessity for their presence was removed, and the Government of Louis le Desiré established, he may form some idea of the difficulty of the task which Sir Donald Stewart has to face in withdrawing 60,000 men from Afghanistan, through the mountain passes, which do not constitute a scientific frontier. All that can be hoped for is that the British troops may retire without any loss of life and baggage; but it can scarcely be maintained, notwithstanding our victories in the field, that the relations of the Government of India with Afghanistan have been improved by what has been done. Many "fanatics" have been slain; some have been hanged. Ghazees have met their death in the open under the fire of breech-loaders and artillery, or have perished on the scaffold with equal fortitude. "Punitive expeditions" have burned villages, levelled forts, destroyed fruit trees, orchards, and crops, and have left behind them "immortal hate, the study of revenge;" and the courage and discipline of the Anglo-Indian Army, the defects of its administration in transport, the skill and inaptitude of its Generals have been signally illustrated by splendid and conspicuous examples of military virtues and vices; but it cannot be maintained, we think, that the causes of the war have been removed, or that reasons for the recent expedition have been for ever taken out of the range of future probabilities. Shere Ali died in exile, Yakoob Khan is a State prisoner, but Mahomet Jan is in the field against us; in every valley the Mollah raises up his voice against the infidel, and the protegé of Russia, the astute, accomplished, and gallant Afghan whom our authorities look to as their cheval de bataille, on whom they are to ride out of Afghanistan, reigns, if all be well, in the place of men not one-half as capable or as dangerous. This is a sorry outcome of so much cost of treasure and of blood; but it is some consolation to know that the Anglo-Indian Army has proved itself worthy of its ancient fame, and that it has not falsified the hopes which were entertained by the country that it would do its duty, whatever that might be, with zeal and devotion. The British troops moved through Candahar and Afghanistan with as much ease as an iron-clad cleaves the ocean; but the waves closed behind them, and we only held the space which was covered by the fire of our guns. More than one-half of the English regiments and a third of the whole of our artillery have been engaged in the establishment of posts, the garrisoning of positions, the escort of convoys, the protection of communications, and in the work of movable columns of occupation, and the cost has been prodigious—some of its consequences, indeed, deplorable in every way, affecting commercial prosperity and political reputations; but the Afghans have given one more proof of the absolute impotence of purely military preponderance in a country, which will never pay for the needful expenditure, and which furnishes no adequate resources for an army, in the face of the universal opposition of a spirited people animated by a love of national independence. The resolution to give up Candahar appears to us to be quite unnecessary and utterly indefensible. The chiefs and people were amicable, and the cost of occupation would not have been great, its advantages incontestible and conspicuous. The possession, or even the protectorate, would be ample compensation for the failure of the Gundamuck stipulations, which became more than ever nugatory and fallacious in the face of our pusillanimous retreat, and of the adroit blow already dealt at us by Abdurrahman in changing the site of the capital of Afghanistan from Cabul to a comparatively obscure and inaccessible town which we do not command. But not all the money that could be saved by our immediate evacuation, were it multiplied ten times over, would pay for the outbreak of another war; and surely not even the most mean-spirited Government that ever existed would not hear with equanimity that those who aided us in the time of trial were exposed to persecution and death, at the hands of their countrymen, for their fidelity to our cause. But what guarantee have we that they will not suffer the worst of fates the moment the evacuation is accomplished?

It is said in the clubs that the Government was induced to hold over the abolition of flogging for a year by the representations of an eminent soldier, who has recently had experience of command in South Africa. In a year there may be no troops in the Colonies, where they are exposed to such temptations, though we do not believe in confederation. It will be rather hard on the poor victims whom it may be necessary to flog, that they should be subjected to a punishment during the next twelve months which will be unknown at the end of the term. Perhaps they think it advisable to defer any bad conduct till the Government measure has been brought in!

The following is a list of the surviving officers of the Duke of Wellington's army who participated in the battle of Waterloo on June 18, sixty-five years ago:—Field-Marshal Sir C. Yorke, G.C.B., colonel-commandant Rifle Brigade (captain 52nd Foot); Generals Sir T. Reed, G.C.B., colonel 44th Foot (lieutenant 12th Light Dragoons); Lord Rokeby, G.C.B., colonel Scots Guards (lieutenant 3rd Foot (Scots) Guards); G. Macdonald, colonel 16th Foot (lieutenant 27th Foot); G. Whichcote, major, half-pay, unattached (lieutenant 52nd Foot); J. A. Butler, major, half-pay, unattached (lieutenant Grenadier Guards); G. T., Earl of Albemarle, major, half-pay, unattached (ensign 14th Foot); Sir J. Bloomfield, G.C.B., colonel-commandant, R.H.A. (1st lieutenant R.A.); and T. C. Smith, major- half-pay, unattached (ensign 27th Regiment); Captains Donald MacFarlane (lieutenant Rifle Brigade); W. Harris, half-pay, unattached (lieutenant 16th Light Dragoons); Lieutenants J. Bramwell, half-pay, late 22nd Foot (ensign 92nd Foot); A. Gardner, half-pay, late 28th Foot (lieutenant 27th Foot); J. Robinson, half-pay, late 50th Foot (lieutenant 32nd Foot); Quartermaster L. Hardy, New Brunswick Fencibles (in the ranks of Grenadier Guards); Assistant-Surgeon G. Evers, half-pay. Six deaths have been reported since last year, viz., those of Field-Marshal Sir W. Rowan, G.C.B., colonel 52nd Foot; General Sir W. B. Ingilby, K.C.B., colonel commandant Royal Artillery; Colonel W. Burney, K.H., major retired full-pay, late Cape Mounted Riflemen; Lieutenant J. Orr, retired full pay, late 8th Veteran Battalion; Lieutenant A. Watson, half-pay, late 24th Foot; and Surgeon W. H. Young, half-pay.

Orders were lately received in London for 100 men to be obtained for service in the newly-formed Cape Mounted Riflemen. It is stipulated that the men to be sent out shall, however, be restricted to two classes,—grooms or farmers' sons,—to those, in fact, used to the management of horses.

The Authorities are, we understand, about to absorb gradually the twelve regimental lieutenant-colonels of Royal Artillery now doing duty with the Auxiliary Forces, and borne supernumerary to the general establishment. This will increase the block of promotion from which the majors are suffering, which is intensified by the absence of any real roster,—officers not wishing to go abroad being provided with comfortable home quarters, instead of retiring.

Major-General Luard had selected Lieutenant W. H. Holbech, 60th Rifles, to proceed with him to Canada as his aide-de-camp; but in view of the difficulty as to pay, it may be doubted whether General Luard will succeed in finding an officer to fill the appointment, valuable though the services of an experienced officer would undoubtedly be.

Brevet Major W. R. Fox, Royal Artillery, who has just returned from the Cape, where he acted as Deputy-Assistant - Adjutant and Quartermaster - General throughout the Zulu campaign, has been selected to fill the vacancy created in the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department caused by the transfer of Major G. E. Grover, R.E., to the Secretaryship of the Royal Engineer Institute, Chatham. Major Fox holds the Staff College certificate.

Colonel Gordon is no ordinary man, and it would be wrong—at least, it would be unprofitable—to judge of his words and actions by the rules which would apply to those of ordinary people. It is not half so wonderful that he should have given up the post of Secretary to the Viceroy of India, as that he should have accepted the position of subordinate to the Marquis of Ripon. But if Colonel Gordon's words be sometimes hard to construe, his acts are generally, if not always, marked by sense and vigour. The organiser and leader of "the ever-victorious army," the Pasha who ruled over the regions of the equatorial Nile with autocratic sway, has been for years his own master, and it is not matter for surprise that he found his duties as Secretary to an Indian Viceroy as the very last which he was fitted to perform. But he is scarcely logical in his sentimental explanations of his views regarding the Viceroy's mission. It is comfortable, indeed, to find a Biblical Christian of Colonel Gordon's type professing so much Christian charity as to believe that one of the most remarkable achievements of the Church of Rome in securing a great English peer in its fold, should not be inconsistent with the divine administration of our Indian Empire, and we can only hope that the gallant officer may have had some shred of Elijah's mantle on his shoulders when he uttered his prophecy respecting the success of Lord Ripon's rule, in consideration of the impulses and guidance under which it is conducted. Meanwhile, instead of reverting to Zanzibar, to keep the head of Sultan Syed Burghash straight at the anti-slavery fence, Colonel Gordon turns eastward to China once more, and it may be that the mission of which so little notice is now being taken, may prove, in the present state of feeling and of politics in the Celestial Empire, one of the utmost moment, and of the greatest consequence to Europe. The recommendation of Colonel Brackenbury as his successor has much in its favour, and the choice of that able officer, who is now on the spot, would relieve not only Lord Ripon but others from some difficulty which need not be particularly indicated.

We notice one or two improvements in the new Army List. For instance, the surnames of officers are now put first, and Christian names and initials afterwards, which has the effect of greatly facilitating search for any particular name, especially in the case of strong bodies, such as the Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, &c. The names of her Majesty's Equerries are for the first time introduced on page 1, and the lists of Honorary Physicians and Honorary Surgeons to the Queen are, in deference to the wishes of the medical profession, removed from the body of the work and placed after the Equerries on the leading page.

The appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. G. P. H. Villiers, Grenadier Guards, is to take effect from February 28, 1880. It seems, therefore, rather a roundabout sort of arrangement to bring Colonel Villiers on to the establishment of his regiment from April 1 (vide London Gazette of April 30). In an early gazette he will have to be made supernumerary again, and then the step, already over-due, will be given to the senior Lieutenant and Captain of the Grenadier Guards, whose promotion would appear to have been very unfairly retarded. Doubtless it is in strict accordance with the letter of the law that Colonel Villiers has been reinstated as a duty-officer, when all the time he is filling another appointment. Yet even laws call at times for revision.

Good-service pensions of £100 a year each have been granted to the following Army medical officers:—Sir William Muir, K.C.B., M.D., Director-General Army Medical Department; Surgeon-Generals C. A. Gordon, M.D., C.B., H. G. Massy, C.B., W. Munro, M.D., C.B, and T. Crawford, M.D. In submitting a list of recommendations, Sir William Muir naturally made no mention of himself; but his modesty did him no harm, for he received back the document with an order from the Duke of Cambridge that Sir William Muir's name was to head the list.

In face of the present difficulty with respect to good non-commissioned officers, it would be as well for the War Office to consider the advisability of imitating the Admiralty, and training lads for the Army. We doubt whether, in the long-run, any serious additional expense would be involved, and the Duke has pronounced in favour of the scheme, provided that the boy-soldiers were in addition to the effective rank and file. A somewhat similar experiment was tried at the end of the last century. Three regiments, one of which was numbered the 22nd, were raised, consisting of boys, none of whom were over 16 years of age. It is said that the arrangement turned out very satisfactorily.

Colonel A. B. Montgomery having lost his command, consequent upon the amalgamation of the Bradford and York Brigade Depôts, will fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Colonel the Hon. W. H. Herbert upon half-pay. The command at York has devolved upon Colonel T. F. Lloyd.

A letter to the Times, signed "Edward Sullivan," urges the propriety of marking the coming of age of the Volunteer Force by bestowing decorations on some of those who have been most instrumental in promoting the development and success of the movement. The idea is good, and would produce an excellent effect on the Volunteers. Nor would there be anything improper or incongruous in bestowing a Civil C.B. on such persons as Colonel Lindsay, V.C., Lord Elcho, Lord Bury, Lord Ranelagh, and the Duke of Westminster, who have certainly rendered as important military services to the country as some of the War-Office officials who have been decorated. We would also suggest that her Majesty should seize the opportunity for appointing some—say, six—Volunteer Aides-de-Camp. Every branch of the Service, save the Volunteers, of the United Kingdom are represented on her Majesty's Staff, not excluding the Canadian Volunteers. This, as we have said, is an excellent opportunity for remedying what can be only an oversight, but looks rather like a slight.

ERRATUM.—In our paper for June 5, in the leading article upon the Island of Cyprus (page 381), the expression "chat d'occasion," should have been printed "achat d'occasion."

ALERT, Capt. John F. L. P. Maclear, arrived at Talcuahuano on April 21 from the Straits of Magellan, where she had been surveying since October last. The ship had been remarkably healthy, but she had experienced very rough weather during the last three months. She was to leave on the 24th for Coquimbo to refit, and finally quit South America on June 1 for the islands of the South Pacific.

ANTELOPE, Lieut.-Com. the Hon. W. Hylton Jolliffe. The captain and officers of this vessel (which is attached to the British Embassy, Constantinople,) entertained his Excellency Sir Austin H. Layard, G.C.B., Ambassador to the Porte, and Lady Layard at dinner, on board, on the 26th ult., prior to their departure for England, the whole of the officials connected with the Embassy were also invited to meet his Excellency. The ship was decorated with flags and flowers, and capitally illuminated by means of lamps and lanterns which were hung in every available nook and corner. The bridge, where the dinner took place, was specially decorated for the occasion. A circular marquee, consisting of foreign ensigns tastily festooned with the brightest of bunting and an extensive display of plants and flowers from the Embassy and neighbouring gardens, assisted with many pretty devices in which swords, bayonets, and pikes took a prominent part in creating quite a fairy scene. The guests arrived soon after eight, and were escorted by the officers to the dining-saloon, the tables of which were decorated with many varieties of choice fruit and flowers, and on which from time to time were temptingly displayed relays of so much that usually conduces to one's creature comfort, and stimulates one to feel in the best of humours. When ample justice had been done to all the good things provided, the commander, the Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, rose to propose the first toast, "The Queen," remarking on the pleasing duty it afforded him, for wherever loyal Englishmen (and who could vie with the Navy in loyalty) were assembled, they always hailed with delight the opportunity of doing honour to their Queen, who from her domestic virtues and blameless life has endeared herself alike to all owning her sway, &c. The toast was duly honoured by the assembly upstanding. This was followed by the toast of the evening, "Our distinguished guests, Sir Henry and Lady Layard," in which the chairman took occasion to remark on the loss sustained by the whole of the British community in the East by their departure from their midst, and concluding by wishing them all health and happiness where ere they may go. The toast was received with enthusiasm and long-continued cheering. Sir Henry Layard, in responding, thanked his old friends, the Antelopes, for the honour they had done Lady Layard and himself in drinking their healths, and offering them so many good wishes. In the future, it would afford him much pleasure in remembering the happy days he had spent in their company on board, and should they on any future occasion return to those scenes, he trusted to meet with the same courtesy and kindness hitherto extended to them, and to share in equally as pleasant times as the past had afforded. Music and singing brought the agreeable evening to a close.

AUDACIOUS, Capt. H. B. Woollcombe, arrived at Hull on June 7 from Chatham, to ship Coastguard and Fleet men for the coming cruise.

BACCHANTE, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, proceeded to Spithead on Friday, and is expected to sail for Holyhead on June 13. A court-martial held on Monday, on board the Duke of Wellington, sentenced John Mash, ordinary seaman of this ship, to two years' imprisonment for striking his superior officer, Lieut. Osborne, when in the execution of his duty.

BELLEROPHON is to have her boilers and engines removed, and to be thoroughly surveyed. Estimates are to be compiled of the cost of repairing and refitting her for further service as a fighting ship, and also of transforming her into a fighting trooper, with special reference to her adaptability for the latter service.

BLANCHE, Capt. G. Knowles, arrived at Halifax, N.S., on June 6, after a fruitless cruise of sixty days in search of the Atalanta, or some relic of that ill-fated ship.

COMUS, Capt. East, has forwarded a report to the Admiralty of the search made among the Crozet Islands for shipwrecked people. The report states that no traces of the islands having been otherwise visited than by whalers could be discovered, and no information was obtained respecting the Knowsley Hall.

CONSTANCE was launched at Chatham Dockyard on Wednesday afternoon. She is constructed of steel and iron, is cased with wood, and is the first vessel launched at Chatham in which steel has been chiefly used. She will carry no armour, being intended for a fast cruiser, and as she is to be fitted with engines of 2,300 horse-power—her tonnage being 2,383 tons—it is expected she will have a very high rate of speed. Her principal dimensions are as follows:—Length between perpendiculars, 225 ft.; extreme breadth, 44 ft. 6 in.; draught of water, forward, 17 ft.; aft, 18 ft. 6 in. She will carry two 90-cwt. guns, and twelve 64-pounders; and will have a complement of 251 officers and men, all told.

EXCELLENT. Capt, J. O. Hopkins and officers gave an afternoon dance on board last Saturday, and the gathering proved one of the most successful of the many which have taken place. The upper deck of the Calcutta, adjoining the Excellent, was used for dancing, and had been tastefully decorated with bunting, exotics, &c., the general effect being most charming. The weather was all that could be desired, and a large number of guests assembled in response to the invitations issued. Refreshments were served on the main deck, and were of the most recherché description. Everything that could possibly be done for the comfort and convenience of the guests had been arranged, and the éclat with which the proceedings passed off must be a source of congratulation to all concerned.

If found repairable, she is to be at once proceeded with and brought forward for another commission. The Harpy will be placed in the same dock with her for survey and repair.

IRIS, Capt. E. H. Seymour, anchored at Spithead on Wednesday morning, at the conclusion of a six days' cruise for a continuous trial of her machinery, the crank-pin bearings having given considerable trouble while running the mile trials. On leaving Spithead on June 3, she proceeded to Cape Finisterre, where, while under canvas in a lightish wind of the force of four to five, she broke her foremast just before the necklace. The engines were kept going for 135 hours continuously, beginning at the slow rate of 40 revolutions, and gradually increasing up to 80 at the end of the trial, which is a little over half-power. The engines were used both as compound and as low-pressure engines, and worked smoothly without any signs of heating, and the boilers were found to generate an abundant supply of steam without priming. During the cruise the engines were disconnected from and connected with the propellers without any difficulty. Everything having answered satisfactorily, the Iris will now complete her runs on the measured mile, and afterwards depart for the Mediterranean.

LONDON, Capt. H. E. G. Earle, was at Zanzibar on April 17, expecting a new captain out to relieve Capt. Earle. The appointment has only just been made, and Capt. Brownrigg proceeds to take the command of a ship in which the hope deferred of being ordered home has made many sick, numerous cases of fever having recently broken out on board.

NEWCASTLE, Capt. Kelly, having had her defects made good, was undocked on Tuesday at Plymouth. On Friday she was ordered to proceed outside the Breakwater for a two hours' trial of her machinery, and will shortly proceed on her cruise as a training-ship for ordinary seamen.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Capt. Henry R. Wratislaw. Mr. Stedman Arthur Southwell, sub-lieutenant, died on the morning of Saturday last in the twenty-third year of his age, having succumbed to an attack of pleuro-pneumonia. The deceased was a kind and obliging officer, and will be greatly missed by both the officers and men of his ship. His remains have been conveyed ashore to Bantry for removal to London for interment. The coffin was borne on the shoulders of six quartermasters and boatswains'-mates, the Union Jack, which formed the pall, being borne by four of the officers of the ship in full uniform. The crew fell in upon the quarter-deck, and the band played the "Dead March" in Saul. The cortége passed from the cabin to the gangway between the open ranks of the Marines, who lined the way with arms reversed. At the gangway a halt was made, and a portion of the burial service read, after which the 225th hymn was sung. Then the Marines fired three volleys, and the corpse was lowered into a boat and conveyed to Bantry. The scene was solemn and impressive, but was marred by an unfortunate mishap. When the order to "present" was given by the lieutenant in charge of the firing-party, one of the Marines accidentally touched the trigger of his rifle. The contents of the cartridge struck the front rank man in the face, and severely injured him.

Stewart, arrived at Spithead early on Wednesday morning from the North-American and West Indies station, and went into harbour on Thursday to pay off, having been commissioned at Portsmouth on June 1, 1876. The only officers who have served with her throughout the four years are the commander, navigating-lieutenant, and the engineers. On being relieved by the Fantôme, she left Bermuda on March 15, and having encountered some very severe weather while crossing the Atlantic, she was compelled to put into Vigo on May 21 to undergo considerable repairs to her upper works, and to be recoaled and provisioned. She has brought home the five ordinary seamen belonging to the ill-fated Atalanta who were left at Barbadoes.

THE NAVY IN PARLIAMENT.

In answer to questions put by Baron H. de Worms and Capt. Price in the House of Commons, Mr. Brassey said that no particular class of seamen are debarred from receiving the Greenwich-Hospital age pension; but the Admiralty have decided that pensioners in the receipt of 2s. 6d. a day and upwards are not eligible for the award of these pensions. Officers never have been eligible for age pensions. If the age pension be given to men who are already in receipt of 2s. 6d. a day, the effect must be to reduce the number of age pensions available for other men and to exclude a considerable number with very small pensions who have been invalided out of the Service. Having looked into the subject to which the question of the hon. Member for Devonport referred, Mr. Brassey said it did appear that the proportion of Greenwich-Hospital pensions allotted to engineer officers is scarcely adequate; but he considered the appropriation of these pensions must be taken comprehensively, and he could only undertake that the subject should be carefully and impartially considered.

The late purchases and resales of porter and hay made by Mr. Rowsell for the Admiralty were severely criticised last Monday night in the House of Commons by Dr. Cameron, when moving for a select committee to inquire into the circumstances, it appearing from the report of the Controller and Auditor-General that in 1878 the Admiralty purchased from Messrs. Walker and Co. porter and barrels to the amount of £6,225. Before the articles were delivered, it was discovered that they would not be wanted, and the order was cancelled on the payment of £2,750. At the same time another purchase of porter was made from Truman, Hanbury, and Buxton for £8,250. The purchase was made in February, and the delivery, which was not until the middle of June, was in such a form that the porter never left the brewers' premises. When the Admiralty discovered that the porter would not be required, they got the company to buy it back for £4,725. The third instance was still more striking. The Admiralty having swept the home market of hay, went over to Rotterdam, where they bought a quantity which cost £6,900, and with wharfage dues the entire cost was £8,790. This hay was afterwards disposed of for £1,590, so that on an article which originally cost £6,900, they lost £7,200. On those three transactions the loss incurred by the Admiralty amounted to £13,700, or nearly two-thirds of the entire value. That loss was owing to a squabble between two departments of the Government, the Admiralty and the War Office. The hay was somewhat damaged on coming across, but a great portion of it was sound. When it became obvious that it would not be required, it was attempted to hand it over to the Army, but the Board of Survey refused to take it. The Commissary officer, a practical man, proposed that the horses should be referred to, that they might pronounce on the quality of the forage, but that was not done. One of Dr. Cameron's constituents in Glasgow bought a considerable quantity of it, and wrote to say that it was of the very best quality. In discussing the question with different Members, Dr. Cameron had heard commissions hinted at. He would be unwilling to believe there had been any corruption, but there was certainly an amount of imbecility which was as prejudicial to the Service as any corruption could be. These were not solitary instances, they were only specimens of what often occurred. Had it been otherwise he should not have moved. Dr. Cameron gave another instance to which attention had been drawn by the Auditor-General, when a large quantity of raisins had been sold for 14s. 6d. the cwt., and a short time subsequently others bought for 21s. Mr. W. H. Smith admitted the facts, but argued that the whole case involved one of those accidents from which even the best-managed private firms were not exempt. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre admitted that a serious loss had been suffered by the public, but as all the facts were before the House, he did not think it desirable that a committee should be appointed, and the motion was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. Gorst next called attention to the position of the Government in reference to the abolition of flogging in the Army and Navy. Recalling the votes given by prominent members of the Government last Session, condemning the lash as a "brutal and degrading punishment," and the use made of the question by the Liberal party, and especially dwelling on certain "disgraceful placards" issued at Birmingham, he insisted that Ministers, having got into power by stirring up the passions of the "residuum," were bound at once to give a clear and explicit declaration of their intentions. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, in reply to this, announced, amid much cheering, that the Board of Admiralty had decided to introduce an amended Navy Discipline Bill next year, in which flogging would be omitted as an authorised punishment. Sir H. Wolff asked what punishment would be substituted, and, after some observations from Mr. P. Taylor and Mr. Otway, expressing their gratification at this statement, Lord Elcho remarked that though much credit was due to these gentlemen, very little was to be attributed to the Government. Mr. Childers brought the conversation to a close by assuring the House that with regard to the Army also, the Government would not flinch from the declarations they had made in opposition.

Mr. Bentinck took the opportunity of repeating his complaint of the inadequacy of our ironclad Navy, which, he insisted, had no reserves, and was only sufficient for the ordinary purposes of peace. Lord H. Lennox exhorted the new Board not to promise a grand programme, which they know they could not perform with their present insufficient staff; and Mr. Reed, who was disposed to agree with Mr. Bentinck, especially having regard to the progress of the French and German Navies, made some remarks on the cost of the non-effective services, and on the vexed question of the Inflexible.

The House then went into Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre explained that these were practically identical with those proposed by Mr. Smith, and that the new Board had accepted the programme of its predecessors, with this exception—that they proposed to add £20,000 for the special purpose of expediting the completion of the Ajax and Agamemnon. The amount of the Estimates, he said, was half a million less than the average of the last half-dozen years, and only £45,000 greater than those of 1874, when the late Government took over the Navy; but he was not prepared to say that the service of the year could be carried on for a less sum. In reply to Mr. Bentinck, he pointed out that the ironclad reserves were now much larger than he had ever remembered, and there was also an unusually large number of ships in the dockyards which could be completed in a very short time. Mr. W. H. Smith approved the course proposed to be taken by the Board, and expressed an opinion that the time had now arrived when the Admiralty might look forward some three or four years, and frame its Estimates accordingly.

The usual discursive discussion arose on the first vote, and towards the close of it some ridiculous remarks from the O'Finigan on the position of Prince Leiningen provoked a rather angry collision between the Irish party and the Ministerial Bench.

THE ATALANTA.

SIR,—From the first rumour of the loss of the Atalanta, I feared she had followed suit to the Eurydice, employed under similar conditions, and I always wondered at the infatuation of the authorities in employing such a ship, after the warning given by the Eurydice, and the misgivings suggested by her own trial-trip. No doubt these two ships were, according to their original design and equipment, as reliable in bad weather as any of their class, and I had plenty of opportunity of seeing this tested, in sailing with the experimental squadron as assist.-surg. in the good old Inconstant, built on Admiral Hayes's lines, and the victor, in all weathers, over Symonds' crack ships, Vanguard, Vernon, and Pique. The latter, our great rival, was dismasted off Mount Carmel, in 1840, in a hurricane, and would have gone on shore, as the 10-gun brig Scout did close to, had she not brought up with one old-fashioned hemp cable, after parting all her chain ones, and losing all her boats and bulwarks. We relieved her, and our officers used afterwards to say, had the Inconstant been in her position, she would have hauled off the lee shore as surely as the Vesuvius steamer did by steam. But, whatever might be the deficiency of model, there was never the least apprehension in the mind of any man in the Fleet of such a catastrophe being possible as has befallen these two ships, both, strange to say, with female mythological names? And why was this sense of security? Because each ship was thoroughly well manned, and trimmed according to her original design and requirement, and each captain and crew knew thoroughly well what the ship could do, and what she could not. But how has it been with those poor lost fellows? They were in ships however thoroughly well found for the service they were employed in (according to the words of the First Lord of the Admiralty), yet they were in a totally different condition of trim and crew from what they were originally built for. Each, like the Inconstant (I have been in Atlantic hurricanes in her, and felt as safe as in a church), should have had a heavy armament of 32-pounders and shot on upper and main decks, besides ammunition, stores, and ballast below, in which way the great weight was, as it should be, near the centre of gravity. But when these heavy guns, &c., were nearly all removed, and the deficiency of weight above made good by extra ballast below, the ship was bound to roll tremendously, a state of things always considered undesirable for Symondsite ships, even in their best trim and well manned. On the latter point, I am quite sure it is, or was, a great mistake sending a converted man-of-war as a training-ship, with a half-and-half crew, on a long Atlantic voyage. As an old resident of Queenstown, I have more than once heard an old officer of the Revenge expressing his dissatisfaction, not to say apprehensions, on going on his summer exercise trips, with a short crew and a lot of boys only to handle a two-decker; and why should this be? Why should there not be at least one fully-equipped first-class man-of-war spared out of our splendid fleet always stationed either at Dublin or Queenstown, in place of one obsolete, half-manned old hulk, totally unfit to put to sea in the winter in an emergency? Why should Portsmouth, Plymouth, &c., monopolise all the benefits to tradespeople from the Fleet of the United Kingdom? I am not a Home-ruler, though I mention this wrong to Old Ireland.—I am, &c.,

R.N.

An amended programme of works in her Majesty's dockyards, showing the manner in which it is proposed to expend the moneys taken under the shipbuilding votes of the Navy Estimates for the current year, has been issued. Several alterations have been made in the votes proposed by the late Government. The number of men for armoured ships building and for completing new armoured ships afloat is increased by 100; the sum to be spent in wages by £20,000; and the tonnage to be built by 717 tons. These increases are to be made at Chatham Dockyard, and the extra work is to be apportioned as follows:—The Agamemnon to be advanced to 84-100ths, instead of 75-100ths, as originally proposed; and the Ajax, on arrival from Pembroke, to advance to about 74-100ths, instead of 70-100ths. The new ironclad (design not yet decided), which appeared in the original estimates, is struck out in the amended programme, as also are the repairs of the Raleigh. Some alterations have been made in consequence of these changes in the programme, and shipbuilding and machinery will be executed by contract. The amount to be expended in propelling machinery elsewhere than in her Majesty's yards is reduced by £3,500, and the amount for shipbuilding by contract by £16,500. The building of a steel-and-iron corvette, wood-sheathed, of the Comus type, and also of three new despatch-vessels, the latter of which were to be commenced and half-advanced to completion at Glasgow, has been abandoned; while the tonnage of No. 3 steam cruiser, to be built during the year at Portsmouth, is to be increased to 1,770 tons,—i.e., about one-third of its total tonnage.

It is proposed, with the sanction of the Right Hon. Sir John Michel, G.C.B., commanding the Forces in Ireland, that a rifle meeting be held at the Curragh on the 7th and 8th prox., the competitions being open to all troops quartered in Ireland.

TORPEDO WARFARE.

Experiments connected with torpedo warfare were made on Friday last at Portsmouth. The Sprightly, with Admirals Ryder, Hornby, and Lethbridge, and other officers on board, proceeded to Spithead for the purpose of subjecting some dingies, manufactured by the Rev. Mr. Berthon, on his collapsing principle, to a series of experiments. At the present time our first and second-class torpedo-boats are unprovided with any means of saving the lives of the crew, should they from any cause be reduced to a sinking state, and as they are constructed of steel plates not more than 1-16th of an inch thick, which can easily be penetrated by the Nordenfelt gun, and stove in by collision or by coming in contact with a spar or other floating obstruction, the necessity for a lifeboat becomes apparent. But as the decks of the torpedo craft are completely exposed, and are too circumscribed for carrying lifeboats, the problem submitted to the inventor was how to stow boats of a sufficient size under hatches in torpedo craft, the hatches themselves being small, and the compartments in which they were to be stowed only about 6 ft. long. The lifeboats which were tried, measure 12 ft. in length, 4 ft. 2 in. in beam, and 2 ft. in depth. They are divided into two parts, each of which will pass through an opening only 14 in. by 7 in., and when the halves are united (which requires less than half a minute of time), a life dingy is formed, capable of carrying the torpedo crew. Each half can be used singly. The parts can also be detached in the water, and if one half should be disabled in action, it can be cast off, and the retreat continued in the other. The little boats were put to some very severe tests. In about four minutes they were brought on deck, opened, united, fitted with thwarts, crutches, and oars, and launched. They were then manned by six men, and towed at various speeds through the water, for the purpose of testing their buoyancy and the strength of their connections. The halves were afterwards disconnected and rowed by three men. The boats were finally lifted on board, collapsed, and stowed below in the after cabins in less time than it took to open them. In the afternoon the officers studying on board the Vernon celebrated the termination of the senior torpedo class by an exhibition of torpedo warfare up Porchester Creek. The programme was very comprehensive, but contained no novelties. The operations consisted of exploding ground mines, containing 500 lb. of gunpowder each, by means of circuit closers and by direct contact; destroying boom obstructions by means of gun-cotton, firing spar torpedoes, and the removal or destruction of an enemy's fixed mines by means of counter-mining and creeping. A line of twelve counter-mines was laid down and exploded from the Vesuvius in three minutes.

A FORAGE CAP FOR ROYAL MARINES.

SIR,—As a new pattern forage-cap for officers of Infantry of the Line has just been authorised by a General Order, and as the chances are a similar circular will ere long be issued with reference to the Royal Marine Light Infantry, I take this opportunity of suggesting that the privilege accorded to Royal Regiments of wearing a red band round the forage-cap should be again claimed by the officers of the Royal Marine Light Infantry. As Light Infantry they should also wear a green cap, which, with the red band, would form a good distinctive mark for a Royal Light Infantry Corps, and be proudly worn as their right by the ROYAL MARINES.

THE CHANNEL ISLANDS MILITIA.

"X." asks:—"Could any of your numerous readers, through the medium of your influential paper, inform me how it is that the Royal Guernsey Militia adjutants have been in receipt of the new scale of pay, viz., 10s. per diem, with forage, lodging, gas, fuel, and other allowances, from Dec. 29, 1877 (the date on which the reorganisation of the Channel Islands Militia commenced), up to the present time, whilst those of the Royal Jersey Militia are still on the old scale, viz., 7s. per diem (a good mechanic's wages), without one single allowance? It really seems most unaccountable that the sum (and other advantages) voted for the payment of the Channel Islands Militia should be confined to one island. Why should it not be extended to the other? Does it not seem a flagrant act of injustice and a thing most incomprehensible? Here are three or four adjutants who have been promised a few more shillings pay, with forage, &c.; they, with this prospect in view, go to the expense of purchasing chargers at no small cost; but, alas! this prospect, so bright at first, turns out at length to be a mere chimæra, for when applications are made for what they are really owed, and humble petitions forwarded to the War Office authorities, they are simply informed that there is no prospect of the forthcoming pay as yet, the as yet being emphasized to give them a bone of encouragement. But 'hope deferred maketh the heart sick,' and I should think those officers were very much disgusted. I have heard, in a casual way (how far correct I am unable to state), that these adjutants, or at least some of them, have been obliged to dispose of their horses at a very great loss, and are now compelled to hire broken-kneed, spavined cab-hacks, as occasion requires. O tempora, O mores! What a spectacle for sore eyes! A force, too, that the War Office authorities have been trying to render efficient in all respects. Fancy the poor fellows having now to go to their different arsenals, some of which are at a good distance, on foot, blow high, blow low, rain or sunshine, to avoid the expense of hiring animals; and, knowing as I do, the nature of the roads in that island, it must be simply killing work! The expenses for horses, mess, band, &c., must amount to at least £55 per annum; £55 from £120, remain £65 to live and keep up the position of a British officer and a gentleman! Truly magnanimous! It is very much a matter of surprise to me that they are able to appear in the character of the latter at all; remember, too, that one clause in the Militia scheme forbids adjutants pursuing any civil occupation whatever, so that all means of adding to their pitiable allowance are denied them. The Militia scheme also provides a staff of non-commissioned officers, buglers, and orderly-room clerks. Where are all these? Echo answers 'where?' Hoping I have not trespassed too far on your valuable space, and trusting you will use your influence in ventilating the matter."

RESERVE OFFICERS.

"Aspirant" writes:—"Can you or any of your numerous readers understand the Warrant with regard to Reserve officers? Some little time ago, in answer to a question asked in the House about it, the then Military Secretary said that some 500 officers had put their names down to join. Now, it appears, if one can understand the Warrant at all, that all officers retiring from the Service, under certain limitation of age, have no option in the matter, but their names are put down for them, and serve they must if wanted. Under these circumstances, it certainly does appear strange that an officer, recalled to active service, should be bound to serve on less income than he was before in receipt of, for in this very ambiguous Warrant, dated, I think, Aug. 1, 1879, it lays down that an officer recalled from the Reserve to active service is to receive the full pay of his rank which is, of course, considerably less than the pension he before got, more particularly if he should happen to be in receipt of the special Indian pensions. Now that retired officers be liable for service under special emergencies can hardly be complained of, if it were optional, as is the case with the soldier; but that, nolens, volens, an officer retired should be taken for service anywhere or under any circumstances, as the caprice of a Military Secretary may direct, probably to the ruin of any private business that such retired officer may be engaged in, with the extra risk attending on active service anywhere, for it may be apparently as a Militiaman, Bashi-Bazouk, a regular, or instructor of any of the wild tribes that varied circumstances may induce us to mould into the form of soldiers, —I say, that an officer retired should be liable to any or all this, without option, on a reduced income, and no prospect of compensation to his family, if such he has, in case that the chances of service bring the pension to an abrupt termination, certainly appears a strange paradox; indeed, it can scarcely be so intended, but I don't know what other conclusion a perusal of this interesting document can lead you to. Usually after the publication of a Warrant, some time elapses before any one can really make it out; it reads so many ways, and is so ambiguous. The Warrant in question may be regarded as an acrostic, and as I have not yet met any one who has offered a solution, I venture to suggest mine."

A RECEIPT FOR GOOD SHOOTING.

"Looker on" writes:—"The other day, I was on a visit at a large military station, not fifty-two miles from London, and being somewhat of a rifle shot, I thought I would have a look at the musketry practice. Going down to the ranges one fine morning, I found three parties from different regiments firing. After firing a few shots, one of these parties went away, the other two continuing to shoot, and making apparently very fair shooting. Thirsting for knowledge, I inquired of a soldier why the other party had gone away. He replied, 'Oh, that's what we call a fine-weather corps, Sir.' I looked puzzled at this, he added, 'I mean that regiment never shoots if it's blowing a bit; I suppose they are going in for a big figure of merit.' Now, Sir, I would like to ask if our soldiers of the present day are to be taught to fire in calm weather only; and if two of the parties found it fine enough to fire, why was it that the third found it too windy? I should think if regiments only shoot on fine days, they cannot possibly gain the experience required to enable them to shoot on windy ones. Now, Volunteers who are the best rifle-shots we have consider one of the most important things in rifle-shooting is to be able to judge the effect of the strength of the wind on the bullet, and to make the necessary allowance, which experience alone can give, with the wind-gauge."

INFANTRY ACCOUTREMENTS.

"Infantry of the Line" writes:—"The Infantry of the British Army being threatened with a most objectionable change in its accoutrements—I refer to the proposed brown-leather belts—permit me, as one of that body, to protest against a change which, should it be effected, will prove to be an expensive and unserviceable eyesore. 1. Brown leather cannot be cleaned properly without a great deal of trouble and some experience, and if exposed to weather or rough usage, without constant dressing it soon perishes. 2. Brown leather does not look smart or soldier-like with scarlet cloth. 3. Brown leather being very perishable will constantly have to be replaced, and will consequently be very expensive. On the other hand, take the advantages of our present buff accoutrements. 1. They look smart and soldier-like. 2. They last at least three times as long as brown leather will last. 3. On service (when pipeclay is out of the question), they stand the effects of wet, dirt, and rough usage well; and when time can be found to clean them, can be turned out white and smart with little trouble. Buff may be a trifle more expensive than brown leather, but considering that it will wear much longer and looks infinitely smarter, why introduce an unsightly and in the end more expensive article, and do away with accoutrements that are both soldier-like and serviceable. Trusting that you will raise your powerful voice in favour of a good cause, and help us to retain our buff accoutrements."

On Monday night a novel application of the electric light was made in Portsmouth Dockyard for the purpose of determining whether it was practicable to illuminate a dry dock sufficiently for workmen to continue at work throughout the night. The dock in which the turret-ship Inflexible is, was selected for the experiment. Seventeen lamps each giving a light equivalent to 2,000 candles, were fitted on spars in different parts of the dock, and were all lighted from the same circuit. The lamps emitted a white and remarkably steady light, and the illuminating power obtained being calculated at 34,000 candles, the experiment must be regarded as thoroughly successful.

THE ABOLITION OF THE SENIORITY BREVET.

A "General Officer" writes:—"Lately several letters have appeared in the military and other papers pointing out the hardship and injustice the abolition of seniority brevet promotion (which takes place this year) will entail on majors and captains who obtained their promotion before Purchase was done away with. None of the writers have drawn attention to the fact that the Royal Commission, of which Lord Penzance was president, and on which the Warrant is supposed to be based, did not contemplate that this species of promotion should be restricted until the new system was fully established, as the following extract from the 'Report,' page 34, par. 3, clearly shows: —'We are also of opinion that when the Army shall have been brought to the standard rate of promotion, which we have recommended, the practice of conferring brevet rank on the senior major and captain in the Service upon a vacancy occurring in the fixed establishment of General officers may be dispensed with.' Had their recommendations been followed by those who framed the Warrant, the Purchase captains or majors could have had no cause of complaint, and when the standard rate of promotion alluded to has been reached, the officers will have served comparatively short periods in each grade, and cannot expect to be granted the brevet promotion now given upon vacancies occurring in the fixed establishment of General officers. To continue the seniority brevet promotion until all the Purchase majors and captains have been promoted or retired, or, at all events, until the standard periods have been reached, would only be an act of justice to the vested rights of these officers, which the Royal Commission, after due deliberation, considered should be respected."

"Miles" writes:—"Col. North having, with his usual spirit of camaraderie, undertaken to plead the cause of the ill-used Purchase officers, it is to be hoped that the soldiers in the House will accord to him their support on a question which admittedly bears hard on that large body. It is not a party subject, but one which, if rightly understood, would assuredly command the support of both sides of the House. Both parties while in office contributed to the injustice. Liberal and Conservative hobbies equally ground down the Purchase officer. Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi. In 1872 the Liberals drove the nail by superseding five hundred or six hundred captains, and in 1877 the Conservatives clenched it by the total abolition of brevets from Oct. 1, 1880. About 70 captains are now suffering from both these causes, and might be relieved at a cost not greater than the extra retirements lately given to 12 lieut.-cols. of artillery, for no other reason than that they had friends at the War Office sufficiently "scientific" to look after their interests, and to impress the authorities with the belief that they are the British Army,—l'Armée, c'est nous. But as artillery on service generally condescends to accept the escort of cavalry or infantry, so it is to be hoped that the latter may now and then be allowed to feed on the crumbs which fall from the ordnance table. Partial legislation for or against particular interests has not hitherto redounded to the credit of the War Office. In 1871 it was attempted to deprive the Guards of the rights and privileges which they had gained under the old system as indisputably as the purchaser of property is entitled to all its vested interests; but the Household Troops still maintain their position, and will do so as long as one of the old régime is left. The Medical Department is another specimen of the presumption which reigns in Pall Mall, that men will humbly accept and submit to any terms. After years of grievous annoyance and injury to all ranks, the doctors have extorted terms far more advantageous than their predecessors ever looked for. The Purchase lieutenant-colonels were allowed for years to stop promotion in their regiments, and are now handsomely provided for; but no such consideration has been shown to the captains. These are all examples of the working of our institutions, arising from the political changes which introduce men totally ignorant of their official duties, and consequently place them and those over whom they preside at the mercy of "departmental committees," clever clerks, scientific officers, financial economists, and other devices for cutting down every one else to the proverbial straw a day. But, not to pursue this subject further at present, I wish merely to point out that some 70 captains, of 13 or 14 years' service in that rank, and of 18 to 28 total service, superseded in 1872 by the Artillery and Engineers, who are now coming in for lieutenant-colonelcies, think that they have some little claim to justice and recognition. The Queen's Speech alluded to the gallantry of the troops in Afghanistan, as it might also have done to those at the Cape. Let this tribute be put in something like a substantial form. Assuredly, some of these gallant men were Purchase captains."

"A Post-Purchase Captain" writes:—"I see you state in your recent article, that if the proposal to make all captains of 20 years' service brevet majors met with approval at the War Office, it would act most unfairly on the Purchase captains; but is it not still more unfair that all captains who obtained their companies within five years after Purchase was abolished are to be compulsorily retired to a man by the action of the regulation which permits Purchase captains to be eligible for promotion up to the age of 45, whilst the Post-Purchase captains are retired at 40? The injustice of this principle has been recognised by the recent Warrant compelling the retirement of the Purchase colonels. If brevet promotion were to be given to all captains who obtained their companies before the issue of the Royal Warrant of Aug. 1877, on their completing eight years' service as captains, or 20 years' total service, there would be no supersession, as all Purchase captains have eight years' service as such; and it would do much to soothe those who obtained their companies in the interval between the abolition of Purchase and the Royal Warrant under which they are retired, who are naturally much aggrieved by the provisions of the Royal Warrant being made retrospective for them, and their compulsory retirement being rendered almost certain, whilst they are treated exactly the same as bonâ fide non-Purchase officers, without the slightest compensation for the special injuries they sustain."

"Expectans" writes:—"In your last issue, it is pointed out that Colonel North intends to move a humble address that the action of the Royal Warrant abolishing brevet promotion on Oct. 1 next may be suspended. It does not seem to have occurred to any one that should this petition be granted, it will act as a decided check on regimental promotion, for many old captains will linger on in their regiments awaiting their brevets, although debarred by length of service from regimental advancement. These officers will, of course, retard the promotion of younger and more zealous men, who have still something to hope for in their profession, and thus defeat the very object of the Promotion Warrant. The long-service brevet is exceedingly slow, and has only reached the captains of Dec., 1866; consequently, there are the whole of the captains of the five succeeding years (to Nov. 1, 1871, when Purchase was abolished) awaiting the brevet, a claim to which they purchased with their companies. As an instance of the slowness, two out of the three captains promoted to brevet majorities in the month of April last have completed 25 years' service, the third having 23 years' service; and there are hosts of others whose first commissions date equally far back. Regulations are seldom made retrospective, as is practically the case with the Warrant abolishing brevet promotion (for it affects men who had purchased the right to brevet majorities long before the Warrant was thought of); and if the Purchase Captains are entitled to this promotion, they should receive it before October next, and not be induced to drag on in their regiments at the expense of their juniors. It is to be remembered that if these brevets, to which there is an undoubted claim, were given, most of these officers would retire; and that their brevet, in that case, costs nothing, for it adds nothing to their pension. I say that they would retire, because being ineligible, from length of service, for regimental promotion, they have nothing to gain by remaining. It may be with certainty calculated, therefore, that all those captains whose length of service precludes them from regimental promotion, will retire on receiving the brevet, and thus, consequently, such brevet will be no expense to the State. Should it be found impossible to grant the brevet to all the captains promoted before the abolition of Purchase, then the compromise, which can be readily effected, is, to give it to such of them as have become ineligible for regimental promotion by length of service, on their signifying their intention of retiring when they get this step. They would then be enabled to quit the Service with the honorary rank of lieut.-colonel, which is the goal aimed at. This would injure no one, being promotion on retirement only; no one would be superseded; regimental promotion would not be retarded; and, lastly, although doing justice to old and unfortunate officers, it would cost nothing! I have said that Warrants are rarely retrospective in effect; the claims of present possessors to an anticipated step being usually respected, and a very apposite instance of this occurred on abolishing the privileged promotion of the Guards, when the right of the then holders of the several ranks to their next step was duly conceded."

ZULU CAMPAIGN PROMOTIONS.

"Commissariat" writes:—"An erroneous statement having been published in two of your weekly contemporaries, of the 8th and 15th ult. respectively, having reference to the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments, and which states that in the latter no promotions have been granted for the late wars in South Africa, may I be permitted through your columns to point out that the following steps were given?—Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Wright to be deputy-comy.-gen., and Assist.-Comys. Campbell and Stevens to be deputy-comy. The correspondent making the statement in question altogether ignores the fact that transport, in addition to supply, formed the chief item and difficulty of the Zulu campaign, and for which the Commissariat was responsible. As regards the Ordnance, the officers of that service employed at Woolwich would be most deserving of reward, as that place being the chief depôt from whence all munitions of war are forwarded, the greatest anxiety and labour must have been there, the receipt and issue at the seat of war being a very simple matter, and confined to officers who, with very few exceptions, were required in the field. Taking into consideration the relative numbers of the two departments employed in the campaigns, the promotions granted may be said to be quite proportionate. Previous to the introduction of the fiasco "Control," the question of awards to these two branches being assimilated was never raised, and now that they have been again entirely separated—the one being under the Horse Guards, the other the Surveyor-General of the Ordnance—there would seem to be no reason why comparisons should be drawn."

THE MILITIA, AND HOW TO IMPROVE IT.

Col. G. G. Walker, Scottish Borderers, read a paper at the Royal United Service Institution lately on "The Militia and How to Improve it," the meeting being presided over by Col. Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P. The lecturer said that having been for some 26 years connected with the Militia he felt that he was entitled to speak with a practical knowledge of the branch of the Auxiliary Forces. With regard to the improvement of the force, he thought that during the first year of his service the duration of training for the recruit might be extended to 84 consecutive days, and that during the annual drills camp life might with advantage be substituted for the billet system. The amount of professional knowledge on the part of the officers was capable of being increased, and they should be encouraged to attend schools of instruction. He also wished to advocate the serving out of a helmet instead of the Glengarry cap to the men, and in other points of their dress and equipment they should be brought nearer to those of the Regular troops, especially so with regard to the rifle, which should be the Martini-Henry, as it was highly undesirable to have two kinds of weapons in use among men who were constantly passing from one force to the other. Having offered suggestions for the improvement of the artillery and engineer portions of the force, Col. Walker said that the reforms he had suggested were few and modest, but that he believed that if his proposals were adopted, the country would possess a force on which it could safely depend. The history of the Militia since its early days of an almost parochial system had been one of steady development, and he now wished to see its availability for more extended service generally recognised, and to make every militia recruit liable to service in the garrisons of Europe, the Mediterranean, and of British North America in the event of war. In conclusion, he declared that the militia was not an old worn-out tool to be flung aside, but was a tried and trusty weapon to be carefully preserved, and that the more the country used the force, the more it would improve and the more solid the support it would be enabled to give to the Army of the line. Colonel Loyd-Lindsay said it was clear that if this country was ever engaged in a serious Continental war the Militia, would have to bear a considerable portion of the burden, and he confidently hoped that if called upon the force would be able to stand beside the men of the Line. Many important and useful suggestions had been made that afternoon. Having been for some time engaged in a financial capacity at the War Office, he naturally looked at and classified all these proposals into two categories,—one of improvements to be carried out within the estimate already provided for that particular department, and the other class of those which would entail further expenditure of public moneys. Looking practically at many of the suggestions made, he was afraid that they would entail that further expenditure; and although he would admit readily that they would be beneficial to the force, yet he feared they would cost more money than the House of Commons, liberal as it might be, would be willing to grant. Turning to those practical suggestions which might be carried out without increased expense, he quite agreed that it was advisable that more care should be taken in enlisting and paying the bounty-money to men who subsequently failed to put in an appearance, and that the non-commissioned officers should be encouraged to train in the School of Musketry. Again, with reference to the recommendation that the training of the recruit should be extended from eight to twelve weeks, he could also endorse that, for the first drills a soldier underwent were those he was never likely to forget. More leniency might be shown in granting absence to a man who had performed these drills when called up for his subsequent trainings. As to shooting, he could say that a certain per-centage of the men were this year to have their time specially devoted to the use of the rifle. The usual vote of thanks was then given to the lecturer for his interesting paper.

The Missions to Seamen Society is extending its operations to the shipping in several ports hitherto unoccupied by chaplains. The Rev. G. T. Turnbull has been appointed Missions to Seamen chaplain for Portland Roads; the Rev. C. R. Dawes, M.A., chaplain to the fishermen at Hastings; the Rev. S. Phillips, chaplain to Belfast Lough; and the Rev. A. Rust, chaplain to Dunkerque harbour. The Rev. C. M. Woosnam, B.A., has also been appointed chaplain to the shipping on the Tyne, an old station of the Society for Missions to Seamen. The increasing trade of Newport, Monmouthshire, is to have a Missions to Seamen chaplain, so soon as a suitable clergyman can be found willing to undertake the duty.

Extracts from telegram of special correspondent Cape Argus (F. J. Dormer), dated Durban, March 20, 1879, 9.35 a.m.:—"The 60th Rifles landed here this morning, and leave for Lower Tugela on Saturday. They have been let loose upon the town this evening, and the main street is, at the moment, a rare scene of drunkenness and riotous behaviour." The special correspondent of the Cape Argus, writing from Durban, on March 21, 1879, records the arrival of the 3rd Batn. 60th Rifles, and continues: —"Few people knew of these last arrivals being in garrison until after sun-down, when the whole battalion apparently was let loose upon the town; and, for some hours past, peaceable citizens have traversed the main thoroughfares in terror of their lives." Writing on April 16, the special correspondent of the Argus with the coast column says:—"This morning there was a 'punishment parade' in the camp of the 88th, when a lance-corporal and a private received fifty lashes each, for being drunk while on duty. Much as one cannot but regret that flogging is still resorted to in the Army, it must be conceded that on active service the strictest discipline must be maintained; and that being drunk while on sentry, in an enemy's country, is a crime so serious that in most Continental armies the offenders would have been shot." On the following day, the same correspondent writes:—"This morning, in the grey light of early morning, a private of the 99th received fifty lashes, for the use of abusive language to a non-commissioned officer. . . . . . A few glasses of that pernicious beverage, Natal rum, serve to speedily make a young English lad, fresh from life aboard ship, more than merry. If discipline were really discipline, it would be made a military offence to touch this vile liquor, which has already sent some of the new arrivals to an early grave."

Obituary.

Gen. P. K. MacG. Skinner, C.B., on the Retired List, late of the Bombay S.C., died at 3 Fauconberg Villas, Cheltenham, on the 3rd inst., in the 75th year of his age. The deceased was the youngest son of the late Capt. C. MacG. Skinner, of the 70th Regiment. He was born in the year 1805, and entered the Hon. East India Company's service at an early age. He served in command of a detachment of the Poonah Auxiliary Horse with the field force in the Mahee Kanta and Edur districts in the winter of 1835-36, and also on the staff with the Bombay column in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the siege of Mooltan, the battle of Goojerat, and the pursuit and surrender of the Sikh Army, for which he received the medal with two clasps and a brevet majority. He became General in 1877.

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MILITIA SURGEONS.

"A Senior Surgeon" writes:—"The case of Militia surgeons being compelled to retire at 65 years of age without compensation is felt by them to be a great grievance and injustice, which it is hoped the present Secretary of State for War will cause to be redressed. The senior Militia surgeons have sacrificed their private professional incomes for the convenience of her Majesty's Service, having been called upon during the last 25 years to take the varied duties of the military hospitals at different stations for the small sum allowed by the War-Office contract allowance. These duties have been performed at the sacrifice of much time, two or three hours every morning, just as it suited the orders of the Director-General of the Medical Department, and to meet any sudden requirement of medical service for the Army. The bulk of the Militia medical officers would never have consented to place their names on the Militia Medical Department List, had they known or been given to understand that they would have been compelled to retire at 65 without compensation. They interpreted the Medical Warrant as entitling them to a retiring allowance. The carrying-out of this inequitable arrangement is felt to be a grievous injustice, and one that is not exercised in any other department of the public service. Lord Cardwell, the great promoter of changes in the Army, stated in the Lords that the case of Militia surgeons retiring or losing their appointments would be taken into consideration, and each case taken on its own merits. We respectfully request that the new Secretary of State for War will reconsider our case, and award us justice for the loss of income derived from appointments regarded in the light of vested interests."

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

To All Leaving Home for a Change.—Bilious attacks and sea-sickness.—"I can seldom go to sea without being sick, and I can safely say Eno's Fruit Salt is the only thing that ever gave me relief, and I shall ever recommend to all who suffer from sea-sickness.—I am, yours truly, W. Boyce, Signalman, H.M.S. Industry, May 24, 1880." Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked Eno's Fruit Salt. Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Prepared by J. E. Eno's Patent at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E.

Reviews.

Dod's Parliamentary Companion.—Dod for 1880 has flourished for 48 years, and still retains its vital energies unimpaired. The "Companion" for this year provides a considerable increase of Parliamentary matter, which will prove extremely useful to many. We find from it that 241 persons who had no seat in the House of Commons at the time of its dissolution have been returned to the new Parliament, involving an amount of change larger than has taken place since 1832. The complete change of Ministry which has taken place has also caused additional labour to the editor, from the large variety of alterations which have become necessary. Extra vigilance has also been required in recording the politics of each Member, the balance of parties being so close. Altogether, Dod's Parliamentary Companion for 1880 sustains its claim to patronage.

The Doom of the Great City. By D. Delisle Hay. (Newman and Co.)—This highly-sensational narrative is supposed to be written at the commencement of the year 1942, and to describe the destruction of the entire population of London, not by plague, not by fire, but simply and effectually by fog. The narrator, an octogenarian, writing from New Zealand, relieves his mind somewhat in the manner of the Ancient Mariner, by revealing to his grandchildren his personal experiences of the fateful year 1882. Before describing the terrible catastrophe, he draws a vivid picture of London society as he knew it, some sixty years before, and we may suppose that the raison d'être of the pamphlet is to read a lesson of warning to the denizens of our "modern Babylon." Although we may be sceptical as to its effects on them, few will be found to question the author's descriptive powers.

Practical Photography. By O. E. Wheeler. (Bazaar Office.)—The second part of this instructive little book treats of Dry-plate Photography, giving a full description of the various processes by which the preparation of dry plates is accomplished. In order to assist students who have not made themselves acquainted with the first part of the work, the author enters into a slight recapitulation of the observations he therein made, which will be found exceedingly useful.

The Theatre. Edited by Clement Scott. (C. Dickens and Evans.)—The monthly number of this popular review is quite equal to the average, and is rendered more than usually interesting from the list of histrionic stars who have lately challenged public support. "The Gaiety Revivals," "L'Aventurière," "The Danites," "School," "Heartsease," and "Iolanthe" are critically noticed, whilst at the same time several pages are reserved for other matter equally interesting to the readers of The Theatre.

We have great pleasure in recommending to our sporting friends in the Services the excellent series of The Country, which for excellence of matter and cheapness cannot be surpassed. "The British Dogs," by Mr. Hugh Dalzell (the well-known "Corsincon"), are admirable, and the illustrations, in a work which is issued in sixpenny parts, are as good as any which can be found in the most costly books on the subject. The papers on "Fishes and Fishing" seem equally deserving of commendation.

The Sportsman Guide to the Turf.—A most desirable pocket-companion for all sporting men. It affords the most accurate information on all the great events connected with the turf, and draws a comparison between past and present racing.

Amusements.

The two Italian Operas have given during the week repetitions of works familiar to the public, and only deriving immediate interest from the popularity of the principal vocalists, or from the introduction of fresh artists At Covent Garden, the début of Madame Sembrich has been postponed for a week, in consequence of indisposition; and "Faust and Marguerite" and "Don Giovanni" have been given, with Madame Adelina Patti in her familiar assumptions. At Her Majesty's Theatre, Madame Eleonora Robinson, of the Hamburg Opera Company, possessed of a commanding presence and a soprano voice of great compass, has been favourably received as the heroine of Beethoven's "Fidelio."

The theatrical interest of the week has centred in the Dutch plays produced at the Imperial Theatre by the Rotterdam Dramatic Company, who, despite the difficulties of speaking in a language with which most Englishmen are unfamiliar, have established for themselves a high place in the estimation of audiences attracted by the novelty of an enterprise entirely without precedent. That Holland had a dramatic school of its own came like a new revelation on the audience assembled on Monday night, and they discovered, to their evident surprise, that this troop of Dutch comedians had attained a very high degree of proficiency. In a succession of pieces popular on the Rotterdam stage, the actors have given a truthful and impressive rendering of all the varied emotions depicted, claiming from the delighted spectators the most unreserved acknowledgments. In the portrayal of character, not the slightest trace of exaggeration was to be found. Exuberance of gesture, often carried to such an absurd extent on Parisian boards, has never offended the eye. Facial expression is employed with wonderful success and with so much aptitude of significance that the purport of every speech could be understood through this agency alone. The main attraction of these interesting performances may, however, be identified with the remarkable power and pathos displayed by the leading actress, Miss Beersmans. Comely in feature and commanding in figure, with a complete control over the sympathies of the auditory, this accomplished artist has received the readiest tributes to her histrionic genius in plaudits spontaneously and enthusiastically bestowed. On Tuesday evening, Miss Beersmans gave a highly artistic rendering of Marie Antoinette in a Dutch version of the historical play, in seven acts, originally written for Madame Ristori.

At the Vaudeville, on Wednesday night, Mr. Albery's comedy of "Two Roses" took the place of his unfortunate "Jacks and Jills," which have tumbled down as rapidly as their namesakes commemorated in the nursery legend.

A lively little comedietta, entitled "Hester's Mystery," written by Mr. A. W. Pinero, of the Lyceum, has been incorporated with the programme of the Folly Theatre, where Mr. J. L. Toole is still making audiences merry by his amusing acting in the comedy of "The Upper Crust."

The Royalty Theatre, which has seen many changes of management during the last dozen years, has now passed under the direction of Miss Kate Lawler, who will open next Saturday with Mr. Frank Marshall's comedy of "False Shame" and Mr. Byron's burlesque of "La Sonnambula."

The Victoria Theatre, in the Waterloo Road, will, after this week, cease to exist as a dramatic establishment. It is understood that the building is to be converted into a "coffee palace," with music-hall entertainments.

Intelligence of the death of Mr. John Brougham in New York reached London by telegram on Tuesday night. This well-known actor and dramatist was born in Dublin in May, 1814, and made his first appearance on the stage at the Tottenham-Street Theatre in 1830. After obtaining considerable repute as a delineator of Irish character at the Olympic and the Princess's, Mr. John Brougham went to America, where he was personally as well as professionally held in the highest estimation.

EAU DE SUEZ.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath, will be entirely relieved, and never suffer again, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow, Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS.

—It is admitted by every one who has personally tried these noble remedies for any eruptions, sores, ulcers, bad legs, &c., or who have witnessed their purifying and healing effects on others suffering from such maladies, than nothing more can be desired than these medicaments possess. The Ointment relaxes the swollen muscles, diminishes inflammation, assuages pain, and even alleviates dangerous maladies which may have lasted for months, or even years. Holloway's excellent preparations are effective singly, resistless in combination, and have been recommended by grateful patients to be sought as the alternatives when all other means of regaining health have failed. Their action is temperate, not violent, or reducing.

H. ST. GEORGE WILKINSON & CO.

were awarded in Australia, and at Vienna and Paris.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are almost a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered (in not less than three-dozen cases) free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury, in returning thanks for the Archbishops, Bishops, and Clergy of the Church of England at the Lord Mayor's banquet on Wednesday last, declared "that the Church was not dead, though some people were in the habit of repeating that it was on the point of dissolution." But certainly, if all the Archbishops and Bishops were turned out of their Sees as soon as they became seventy years of age, and if all the Bishops, Deans, and Deacons, &c., were dispossessed of their dioceses and livings as soon as they had completed five years' tenure of them, we doubt if his Grace would have been quite so well satisfied with the "evidences of great and powerful animation" which came under his observation and knowledge in the Church. What would he say if all the recruits of the army of the Church Militant were entered for "short service," and were told off to a grand "reserve" and turned out of the ranks as soon as they had learned their duties? Before the Archbishop spoke, Sir Garnet Wolseley, who may be regarded as a kind of "young Dr. Tait" of the Army, made a speech to the Bishops and their wives, in which he availed himself of the opportunity which the toast for which he returned thanks afforded him to make a remarkable statement. "He regretted [he said] that the first thing told him on his landing in England was that the condition of the Army was deplored by many sections of the nation." We suppose that what Sir Garnet Wolseley meant to say was that he regretted many sections of the nation should be under the impression that the condition of the Army was deplorable—not that he regretted to hear the truth. "He regretted being told," he added, "that many held the Army was not the great military force it had been in former years." But although he might regret hearing such statements, Sir Garnet Wolseley said he "was not surprised at them, for ever since he first entered the Service, he had continually heard complaints that it was going to the dogs." Now, the fact that such complaints were made long ago does not prove by any means that they are unfounded now. It has nothing at all to do with the circumstance that "many sections of the nation" deplore the condition of the Army, and hold that it was not the great military force it has been. No one—not even Sir Garnet Wolseley—can maintain that the Army which served under the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula and Belgium was not better than the Army which served under Sir James Simpson in the Crimea. We presume no one with any knowledge would say that the troops in the camp at Chobham were not better fitted for hard work than those which are now under Sir T. Steele at Aldershot; whilst it would be insulting to the Army of Sebastopol to compare it with the force of which the moral condition was lately described by Major-General Newdigate, in his memorable report to Sir C. Ellice. But though Sir Garnet Wolseley was "surprised to hear that the shortcomings of the Army were attributed to the short-service system, by those who remembered how an army raised under the long-service system [the italics are our own] totally disappeared in a few months, under the walls of Sebastopol," is he quite sure that an army raised under the short-service system would have ever got under the walls of Sebastopol at all? Nay, more, is he not convinced in his soldierly heart that the ideal force of short-service lads, which is, it would seem, his beau idéal of what an army should be, would never have faced the heights of the Alma, and would have joined what Mr. Kinglake calls "the spent forces," at the first touch of the Russian columns on the plateau of Inkerman? Sir Garnet Wolseley speaks of the Long-Service Army as having "disappeared in a few months" under the walls of Sebastopol, but it is a fact that the regiments which formed it began to feel the wear-and-tear of campaigning in March, 1854; that they were subjected to all the trials of fever and dysentery in Bulgaria for four months before they fired a shot; that they marched on September 19 from the landing-place at Old Fort with the deadly incubus of cholera upon them; that they won three great victories, the names of which shall endure for ever; that they sat down in the depth of winter to one of the most tremendous tasks ever accomplished by any army in the history of the world; and that in the trenches, day and night, in mud and snow, in misery and semi-starvation, that long service,—aye, that good old long and glorious service army, dwindled slowly away, in the face of an enemy which never took from it an inch of parapet or sandbag. The disappearance of the Short-service Army would, we opine, not have been possible, for there would have been no appearance of the force in the field; and so it could never have disappeared from the face of the foe. If long service has no more grievous fault than that the Army which went out in 1854 was its outcome, we say that no price would be too great to pay for its retention, for it gave us soldiers who were—to quote Sir Garnet Wolseley's words in reference to some future Army, that is to be produced out of the many reforms and of the changes required by the army of which he spoke, at no distant time, to render it efficient—"worthy of the Queen whom they served and the nation for whose protection they existed." It is misleading to talk of the "popularity" of the new system, in the face of the notorious deficiency of eligible recruits in certain corps, and of the reductions in the standard which render a comparison between the Army of 1854 and of 1879 quite ludicrous. We do not know that any military "catastrophe" beyond that which would have afflicted any army, long or short service, which had been exposed to similar trials, occurred in 1855; but we do know that at the end of the war the long-service British Army (ten-years men and all), well drilled, equipped, and officered, was in a condition which was envied by our short-service Allies. And we believe, moreover, that short service not based on conscription, though it may be popular, is a delusive and dangerous system. Sir Garnet Wolseley is entitled to the utmost respect for his past services, which are but the pledges of what he may do hereafter, and in his distinguished career he has had large experience of the merits and demerits of the British Army; but the recollection of the state in which he found the troops before Sebastopol, when he came out there with his regiment in the winter of 1854, seems to have given a bias to his opinions on the question of recruiting which, in the high position he occupies and in the administrative functions he will so soon exercise, may have an influence which we think pernicious in resisting the reformers who are anxious to restore to the Army some of its old stability and general excellence. Sir Garnet Wolseley has seen no European army engaged in warfare, and the experience of the warfare of the trenches, in which he played a distinguished part, scarcely enables him to judge of the quality needed in military operations against the troops of civilised nations; but he assumes an enormous responsibility if, in spite of all warning from old and experienced soldiers, the teachings of all history, and the recorded convictions of every General who has made a name, he holds that levies of raw boys can face veteran battalions, and that the élan of youth can compensate for the want of stamina and discipline in the field. The armies of Marlborough, Wolfe, and Wellington were mainly composed of "professional" soldiers, of men who took the King's shilling to live or die under the colours. There may have been great changes in the temper of the nation, as there have been social transformations, to affect the quality and the supply of the material out of which the ranks were filled; but they are not to be met by the creation of bogus battalions of boys, and of a reserve which decays almost as fast as it is formed. The country may be called upon at short notice to put an army in the field. It is not a short-service Army, such as we have at present, that can be relied upon to maintain the credit of the old British Line, the prestige of our flag, the safety, honour, and welfare of the Queen's dominions; not that those who fill the ranks are not as ready to die for Queen and country as the best of their race, but that they do not know how to fight, and that they are not fit for the strain of war.

The efficiency of the Services is measured by their organisation, and discipline is the soul of organisation. Hence, in both the Navy and the Army, discipline, stern and unbending, is a paramount necessity. But by discipline we do not mean tyranny. There is a wide difference between the two, for the tyrant is never a thorough, nor even a good disciplinarian, because the punishments he metes out to enforce discipline are always the outcome of a vindictive spirit, and consequently arbitrary and cruel, and often unjust. The happiest families to be found in every-day life are those the best disciplined. In a regiment or a ship, the same is the case. So also with nations, the best organised being invariably the best governed, and consequently the happiest, the wealthiest, and the strongest. But to enforce discipline, punishments are necessary. The original idea of punishment was pain inflicted on or endured by a person as a satisfaction or atonement by him for some offence he had committed against those rules and regulations accepted by the general community as necessary to its welfare. According to this conception of punishment, it appeared to be just that a person should suffer the same amount of pain which he had inflicted on others by his offence, and hence the origin of the retaliatory principle of punishment, or the lex talionis. This principle is of great antiquity, and is probably the earliest idea which all nations formed concerning the nature of punishment. The infliction of pain for the purpose of exacting a satisfaction for an offence committed is vengeance, and this led to punishments of this nature being styled "vindictive." By degrees, it was perceived that the infliction of pain for a vindictive purpose, otherwise than with the consent and by the authority of the State, was not consistent with justice, utility, or the spirit of Christian ethics; and it then came to be recognised that the proper end of punishment was not to avenge past, but to prevent future offences; and to attain this end, it was generally admitted that the pain of the punishment inflicted on offenders should be sufficiently great to deter persons from committing offences, but not greater than necessary for that purpose. This deterrent principle of punishment has of late years been overlooked, or has been forgotten, owing to the clamour raised by certain political humanitarians against the infliction of pain as a punishment, they apparently believing that the end of punishment is the reformation of the person punished. This view of the nature of punishment is erroneous, as it limits its effects to the persons who have committed the offence, instead of comprehending the much larger number of persons who may commit it. The reformation of convicts who are suffering their punishment is an object which ought to enter into a good penal system, but it is of subordinate importance, as compared with the effect of the punishment in deterring unconvicted persons from committing similar offences; and in the Services punishment should be of such a nature as not only to deter bad characters from joining, but also to afford adequate protection and security to well-behaved men, that should any such characters be entered, they will be deterred, by the nature of the punishments inflicted, from committing offences against the discipline of the Service. Whenever the infliction of punishments becomes uncertain, their efficacy ceases. An uncertain punishment is not feared, and consequently the pain caused by its actual infliction is wasted. Pain may be mental or physical; but there are some natures on whom it would be impossible to inflict mental or moral pain. Corporal punishment ought, therefore, to be abolished only for crimes which can be effectually prevented by secondary punishments. In all cases, punishment should be certain, and equal to the offence. If a punishment be painful to endure, and the pain be of a proper amount, and if it be likewise tolerably equal and certain, it will be a good punishment, and the offence will not often be committed. The maudling sentimentality of modern politicians, who, to secure the votes of the lower classes of their constituencies, never tire of advocating the claims of criminals to be treated with the greatest leniency, is seriously affecting the discipline of the Services, by rendering punishment uncertain, and results which are deeply to be lamented have quickly followed on the recent debates in the House of Commons. Last week, two seamen, one serving on board the Bacchante and the other on board the Malabar, were tried by court-martial for striking their superior officers. In neither case did the court pass a sentence of greater severity than two years' imprisonment, with hard labour, presumably deterred from sentencing the culprits to being flogged by the agitation of Members of the House of Commons against this mode of punishment. It cannot be argued that officers provoke their men to take the law into their own hands. The reverse is the case; and among those serving under the country's flag there are many men who would willingly undergo two years' hard labour, to obtain a dishonourable discharge, rather than remain in a Service which may call upon them to imperil their skins, although well content to make a convenience of that Service when no danger appears near, or until they imagine they can better their position by returning to civil life. It is the force of the bad example set by such men, who do not even stop short at striking their superiors, which ruins the morale of the Services. The only adequate deterrent in such cases is flogging in time of peace, and shooting in time of war, and although opposed to the old practice of indiscriminate flogging, and approving of this mode of punishment being curtailed within the narrowest limits possible, we fear that the announcement recently made by the Secretary of the Admiralty in the House of Commons that flogging will next year be abolished as an authorised punishment in the Royal Navy, will not be conducive to discipline or the general efficiency of the Service. Should flogging be abolished, superior officers must, as in Continental services, be given the right of self-defence, when assaulted or set at defiance, and be allowed to inflict summary punishment upon their aggressors, as the only efficacious deterrent against mutiny.

We learn with unqualified pleasure that the question of the reorganisation of the Royal Marines, which was left in an unsettled condition by the late Board of Admiralty, is now seriously engaging the attention of the present one, and that it is not unlikely that the Admiralty, adopting the views and recommendations made by many Naval officers of position and influence, which recommendations would seem to be conformable with their own views on the subject, will convert the whole corps into artillery; and we believe also, whilst rendering the Marine service a more efficient one, the object will be compassed with a saving of money to the country.

An influential committee is now being formed for the purpose of carrying out the proposal to raise some suitable memorial to the 189 officers and men who perished in the ill-fated Orpheus. The following have already signified their willingness to join the committee, namely:—Sir Henry Barkly, G.C.M.G., K.C.B.; Sir T. Gore Browne, K.C.M.G., C.B.; Sir Julius Vogel, K.C.M.G.; Captain Walter Stewart, R.N.; Commander Sir William Wiseman, Bart, R.N.; Major Aylmer Somerset, Rifle Brigade; Lieutenant John Lees Armit, R.M.L.I. (retired); Charles George Brooke-Hunt (late midshipman of the Orpheus). Any suggestions or communications from those interested will be gladly received by the Hon. Secretary, W. G. Francis Hunt, R.N., Naval and Military Club.

Mr. W. D. Hirtzel, paymaster, R.N., has been appointed secretary to Rear-Admiral John D. M'Crea, superintendent of Malta Dockyard.

The Council of the Royal Geographical Society this year has selected two Naval officers as examiners of candidates for the Public Schools prize medals, which are awarded at the anniversary meeting. The officers are Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney, C.B., F.R.S., for political geography, and Commander Lovett V. Cameron, C.B., D.C.L., for physical geography.

According to telegraphic intelligence, the Garnet, Swallow, Elk, and Forward are about to proceed to Buenos Ayres, which has been declared closed, the mails not being allowed to be landed, and disturbances being apprehended. The landing of munitions of war on the coast of the Argentine Republic has been prohibited by the Government.

We regret to announce the very sudden death of Lieutenant H. L. Ryder, in command of the Merlin, tender to the Hercules, at Greenock. Lieutenant Ryder was a nephew of Admiral Ryder, and commanded the despatch-vessel Vigilant when he was Commander-in-Chief on the China station.

The credit of ordering three fast steam cruisers, something after the type of the Iris, but with a reduced horse-power, which has this week been announced in the daily papers, is due to the late Admiralty, and it is now many weeks ago that we gave the names that had been selected for them, the Leander, Phaeton, and Arethusa.

We understand that some regret is felt in the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers that Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., should have severed his connection with the corps, and have been appointed honorary commander of the Liverpool Brigade. The commission of Mr. Brassey as lieutenant commanding bears date November 25, 1873, that being the oldest commission in the force, and on his resigning the active command, he was made additional lieutenant of the London Brigade, in which he was most popular, and it is now regretted that he should have been transferred to the Liverpool Brigade.

Captain Kelly has been instructed to proceed for a cruise in the Channel only, in the training-ship Newcastle, returning to port weekly. Portland is to be the head-quarters of the ship, but Torbay and Plymouth may be visited if Captain Kelly thinks fit.

The Cygnet and the Falcon have a little excitement possibly in store for them, Sir Beauchamp Seymour having dispatched them in search of a reported piratical craft in the neighbourhood of Smyrna. To capture a pirate in the Mediterranean would certainly be out of the usual course of duty on that station, though an occasional water-thief has been met with in those waters of late years.

Captain Morant has been formally placed in command of the Relief Squadron on the coast of Ireland, and has taken over the duties of senior officer, as there is but little prospect of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh returning to that service, the First Reserve Squadron being under orders to assemble at Portland in the first week in July.

We understand that some new regulations concerning the inspection of mess accounts by commanding officers are about to be issued to the Fleet.

A telegram has been received from St. John's, Newfoundland, stating that the first report of the injuries received by the Flamingo in her collision with an iceberg was an exaggerated one, and that the damage received is confined to the loss of some head-gear.

Lieutenant Robert Rumsey, R.N., who was recently employed in the Minotaur, has applied for permission to take up an appointment which has been offered to him in the Volta River District. Lieutenant Rumsey served in the Abyssinian campaign.

Russia is continuing her active preparations for the expected struggle with China, and on Saturday last the Grand Duke Constantine inspected several vessels which are being prepared for sea at Cronstadt. The cruisers Africa and Zobiaka, belonging to the "Patriotic Fleet," sailed for Vladivostock on Sunday, and the Europa and a floating battery are to follow. From Hamburg it is reported that efforts are being made to purchase three more steamers capable of being converted into armed cruisers.

The readiness which was shown by the United States of America to assist in every way when we sent out the Arctic expedition, under the command of Sir George Nares, has just met with a very fitting return. At that time the Americans placed at the disposal of the Alert and Discovery the provisions and stores which had been left behind by the Polaris. Now that an expedition flying the stars and stripes is in the Polar regions, the Admiralty has sent to the States the charts showing the route taken by Sir George Nares' ships and sleighs, having marked on them the spots at which cairns are to be found, and giving a description of the stores which were deposited in them. The "note" accompanying these charts is of a very friendly tone, stating that England has the greatest pleasure in placing these stores most unreservedly at the disposal of the American Arctic expedition. This is as it should be, and it shows that neither the Alabama affair nor the Fortune Bay dispute is allowed to interfere with our endeavours to make some return to a friendly Power for the aid so readily granted, when we might possibly have required it.

According to news from Berlin, the German Admiralty intends to adopt the system in force in our Naval service, of adding torpedo-boats to the equipment of the larger classes of war ships.

Lieutenant Cotton, of the Euphrates, is, we regret to hear, lying in Haslar Hospital seriously injured by an accident on board his ship on Tuesday last. He was severely jambed between a heavy spar and the side of the ship, causing a compound fracture of the left leg and serious hurt to the other.

The following officers of the Marines have been detailed for duty at the forthcoming Wimbledon meeting:—Major Ozzard; Captains Scafe, Mathias, Norcock, and Dwyer; Lieutenants Pyne, Edye, Langford, Houghton, Denny, and Wright. Some of these officers, with a party of about sixty men, will proceed to the Camp on the 29th inst., but the greater number of them will not leave head-quarters until July 8.

The Tourmaline has been in commission since October, 1876, and although no officers' appointments bear date earlier than April, 1877, yet there are many on board who would be glad if their Lordships would give some attention to providing this ship with an early relief.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., in his flagship Euryalus, was due at Mauritius on Tuesday, and was to leave again on July 1 for Bourbon. After visiting Madagascar and Seychelles, Admiral Jones will proceed to Zanzibar, arriving there on August 3, and remaining a week, returning thence to Trincomalee.

Captain Henry Fairfax, C.B., completes his three years' command of the Britannia on August 31, when it is arranged that he shall be relieved by Captain Richard Wells, who has been in command of the Steam Reserve at Portsmouth since January 1, 1879.

The Committee on the Forms of Accounts of Marine Divisions has been sitting at the office of the Accountant-General of the Navy for the past week, and completed its duties on Tuesday last. Major Travers, paymaster of the Chatham Division, sat as a member of the Committee, in the place of Major Huskisson, retired.

By the new regulations approved by her Majesty, altering the pattern of the forage-cap and instituting a glengarry for officers, to be worn on active service and on fatigue, it is provided that the band for the cap and tuft for the glengarry shall be scarlet for Royal and green for Light Infantry regiments. As the Marines are both Royal and Light Infantry, it has been asked which they will wear, the red or the green? We believe the red band will be restored to the Royal Marines.

The Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Royal Marines has been instructed by the Admiralty to call for an additional number of volunteers among Marine subalterns, for appointment to the Indian Staff Corps. We believe that eleven lieutenants have already been permitted to resign their commissions and to accept service under the Indian Government, and we understand that the total number of officers who will be permitted thus to transfer their services will be limited to twenty.

The Esk having been placed at the service of the London Brigade R.N.A. Volunteers for the summer cruises, No 4 Battery embarks on July 17 at Sheerness, and Nos. 3, 5, 2, and 1 Batteries at Southampton on the following dates:—July 30, August 10 and 21, and September 1. The lieutenant commanding (Sir Allen Young) in an order just issued "hopes that as many men as possible will avail themselves of the opportunity of going afloat." The London Brigade assemble on the Thames Embankment, opposite the Rainbow, at 9 a.m. to-morrow morning, and attend divine service at Westminster Abbey.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, in the Alexandra, with the Téméraire and Thunderer, was at Palermo on June 9, and was to be joined on the following day by the Invincible and Rupert, and would then leave for Naples, where the ships were to remain until to-day. The arrangements were for letters to reach the squadron at Leghorn on July 4; Genoa, July 14; Villa Franca, July 24; Hyeres, July 26; Barcelona, August 4; Cartagena, August 14; and Malaga, August 20; whence the ships were to proceed to Gibraltar. From the above it will be seen that the original programme of the cruise, drawn up by the Admiral, and given in these columns, has been somewhat modified, and, according to a telegram from Naples, the cruise is now temporarily suspended. The Thunderer has attracted much attention, and at Palermo was crowded with visitors, the interest taken in the ship being heightened from the fact that, like the Italian ship Duilio, she has had the misfortune to burst one of her guns.

We desire to call the attention of Lord Northbrook to a letter in another column, pointing out certain unmistakable grievances which some of our blue-jackets are called upon to suffer. The letter is outspoken, and much to the point, and we are the more ready to accept the views therein expressed, as they do not come from the lower deck, but from one who has been induced to write as he has from a sense of the needless annoyances to which the men are subjected.

Baron N. N. de Rothschild has contributed £100, and Commander Sebastian Gassiot has given £25, to the fund now being raised by the Lord Mayor for the Mansion House Atalanta Fund.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, has accepted the invitation of the members of the Navy Club (Thatched House) to dine with them on the 7th of July.

Admiral Ryder has received directions to have a searching inquiry made as to the healthiness of the moorings of the St. Vincent, in Portsmouth Harbour. For the third time within a short period, the ship has had to be placed in a mild form of quarantine, owing to the outbreak of scarlatina. All entries from the shore and all drafts to other ships are prohibited, and the services of the St. Vincent as a training-ship are consequently nil. It is suspected that the sickness may be caused by drainage from Haslar Creek and the Naval hospital flowing into the harbour at the spot where the St. Vincent is moored, and this matter is to be forthwith inquired into.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to award to Retired Commanders G. M. Combe and James S. Davison the naval pensions of £50 a year, vacant by the deaths of Retired Commanders Ashley La Touche and W. St. L. Quinlan; and to Retired Chief Engineer Thos. Waterland the Greenwich Hospital pension of £50 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Chief Engineer Thomas Ramsay.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to award to Captain W. C. Chapman, R.N., the good-service pension of £150 a year, vacant by the retirement of Captain C. H. Simpson.

We are glad to notice that in the recent competitions at Marlborough, a son of Captain Seymour Curtis, R.N., was elected to the House Scholarship, worth £80 a year.

A Circular has just been issued notifying that a number of pensioned petty officers of the Navy and non-commissioned officers of Marines are to be engaged as writers in the Admiralty establishments at the ports. Candidates are to undergo an examination before the Civil Service Commissioners in handwriting, orthography, copying manuscripts, figures, and tabular statements, and in elementary arithmetic, including vulgar and decimal fractions. The scale of pay to be from 5s. to 7s. per diem, in addition to pension, and the limit of age at appointment to be 45 years.

We are in danger of being deluged by a flood of nonsensical "Birth-day Odes on the Coming of Age of the Volunteers." We may as well get at once to centenary celebrations of the British Constitution. There is, it need not be said to people of common-sense, any analogy between the coming of age of an individual and the twenty-first anniversary of the creation of any corporate or public body. It is a matter for sincere and solid gratification that the Volunteer force has attained its present dimensions and excellence, and that it has become a permanent integral and valuable part of the Reserve forces, but we should be very sorry indeed to see the Volunteers placed on the footing of a National Guard, which has been in other countries the fruitful source of disorder and revolution. On a careful perusal of the correspondence and statements relating to the proposed review in Hyde Park, we are inclined to express an opinion which is not in accordance with the view we expressed last week, and to say that the Government is right in its decision, although the reasons assigned for it may not be the best in the world. There are obvious considerations in connection with the march of 40,000 men to Hyde Park, and the assemblage of, perhaps, 400,000 people to look at them, and these would assume greater gravity when the results of the march back and dispersion came to be estimated. On the whole we think the game is not worth the candle.

Mr. Plowden, the newly-appointed Consul-General at Bagdad, till lately Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department under Lord Lytton's administration in India, has had considerable experience in Eastern affairs, and is likely to prove a very competent successor to Colonel Nixon. By all accounts, there will be plenty to do in the Valley of the Euphrates, where the tribes are giving trouble to the Turkish authorities, and famine is rampant in the towns.

The extraordinary decision of the new French War Minister, that the French Army is no longer to make a noise in the world with its drums, and that the tambours, major and minor, are to beat no more, is calculated to produce a very general impression, we think, that there may be changes which are not reforms, if there be no better reasons assignable for the abolition of the drums than those which are attributed to General Farre in the abstract of his circular. Why are drums useless now more than in time past, and why does it need more time to teach a drummer his trade now-a-days than it did formerly? The drum has played a considerable part in the military life of modern armies, and "the points of war" have been beaten for hundreds of years in camp and quarters in the armies of France, Prussia, and Great Britain, and many a tradition of glory is bound up in the sheepskin of the cylinders, which were emblems of honour, and were next to the colours in the estimation of captures and losses. Imagine our "British Grenadiers" without their "tow-row!" or a French infantry march without the clatter of "dry drums!" As to the Prussians, we may be quite sure that the drum and fife will be cherished at least as much as ever now that the French have given up roll and ruffle.

At the anniversary meeting yesterday a life-sized portrait of Major-General Boileau was presented by his friends and fellow committeemen to the Soldiers' Daughters' Home, to be placed in the dining-hall.

Our respected contemporary, the Civil and Military Gazette of India, in an article on British officers and their weapons, in the number of May 24, which has just reached us, calls attention to a matter of very considerable importance. "The age of chivalry" may be over and past, but the officer is still obliged to lead his men, and is, especially in Cavalry, exposed to chances of direct personal conflict with the enemy; but his official weapon is only a sword, which may be a bad one, and of which he may be a very bad master. Our contemporary maintains that "it is the duty of Government to insist on every officer being armed with a good sword and standard pattern of pistol, and that every commanding officer should be held responsible for all under him being proficient, at all times, in the use of both weapons." That would be a very heavy responsibility for "the commanding officer," and we do not see our way clearly to the imposition of it upon him, unless he has control over the physical resources of every officer "at all times;" but we think that the matter ought to be considered with a view to some regulations being framed for the equipment of officers in the field.

The Russian War Office is engaged completing a plan for reorganising the Army Reserve, by embodying in it local battalions and territorial detachments at present affiliated with the active army.

There ought to be a full meeting at the Royal United Service Institution on Wednesday next, when Lieutenant D. C. Dean-Pitt, R.A., late aide-de-camp to Sir Richard Temple at Bombay, has consented to deliver a lecture on the subject of transport, which, it is needless to say, is the most burning question the late campaigns in Afghanistan and Zululand have given rise to. Lieutenant Dean-Pitt has made a study of the matter, and his suggestions will, we doubt not, be as valuable as his paper is certain to be interesting.

A correspondent draws attention in another column to the case of a most ill-used and deserving class of officers, to whose treatment under the present Warrant we have on several occasions referred. Our correspondent points to the case of one officer who has the strongest claims to the favourable consideration of the War Office, on account of his long and meritorious services, and the facts put forward suffice to show how seriously the "reduced officer" has been affected as a result of the sweeping reductions carried out in the Army in April, 1870. We can imagine no more cruel wrong than that under which the officers of the reduced regiments have been made to suffer, and we should have thought that every opportunity would have been taken advantage of to treat them with liberality, instead of their being robbed, as they are by the terms of the Warrant, of that which is their right. It has to be remembered that the several regiments disbanded in 1870 were broken up at the instance of the Government then in power, and against the wishes of the officers themselves, who had no voice in the matter. As soon as it became known that reduction was pending, all retirements—and as a natural consequence promotion—ceased. In the case of the 3rd West India Regiment, three officers were on the point of retiring from length of service, and would certainly have gone before March 31, 1870, had not the information reached them of the step the Government had in contemplation. To compensate the seniors in the several ranks for the loss of promotion, they were given steps of unattached rank, and the officer mentioned by our correspondent was one of those who accepted this supposed boon. For years did many of the victims of reduction appeal in vain to be restored to full pay. The Horse Guards expressed itself anxious to do what it could to meet their wishes, but it was entirely prevented from providing for them, and thus they were left to spend year after year in enforced idleness. At length came the Bill for the abolition of Purchase, and after Lord Cardwell's distinct promise to the House of Commons that no man was to suffer in any way by that Act, it was naturally presumed that everything was to be made right, and that the utmost would be done to compensate those on compulsory half-pay for the heavy losses sustained. Yet how do we find matters stand at the present time? As our correspondent says, an officer coming under the category of a "reduced captain" receives, on retirement, only £200 per annum, with no bonus in the shape of over-regulation, whereas every other Purchase captain—every captain who attained that rank prior to November 1, 1870,—can claim £259 per annum on completing twenty years' service, with a bonus. So that in every way the "reduced officers" are losers. Besides having had to spend years on compulsory half-pay, and being deprived of all the benefits of promotion, which would under other circumstances have passed to them, they are, on retirement, offered worse terms than other officers of their standing and service because, forsooth—owing to no fault of their own, be it remembered—they were on half-pay when Purchase was abolished! It would be impossible to conceive a ruling more unjust, and the letter of our correspondent—explaining, as it does, the case of one distinguished officer who is seriously affected by this most iniquitous arrangement—will, we have reason to hope, have the effect of eliciting for a large and most meritorious body the support of some of those Members of Parliament who are ever ready to espouse the cause of oppressed public servants; for of all the grievances ever put forward, there never was one which more richly deserved to be redressed.

The Aldershot Divisional Races will be held on Saturday, July 24, under the Grand National Hunt rules. The stewards will this year be,—Major-General Sir F. FitzWygram, Bart.; Colonel A. H. W. Williams, R.H.A.; Captain L. Thompson, 11th Hussars; Major R. J. Bond, R.E.; Captain W. S. Bagot, Rifle Brigade. Hon. judge, Colonel T. E. Byrne, Royal Artillery; hon. starter, Major J. D. Bourne, 5th Dragoon Guards; clerk of the course, Mr. J. C. Verrall; and hon. secretary, Captain A. E. Turner, R.H.A. There will be nine events in all, three of them open to any officer of the Army or Navy on full pay.

"A rose by any other name would smell as sweet," but a primrose is the only flower which can charm the nose of the Premier. It is the berry of the choicest rose in the Liberal garden, and what wonder if it be selected for the button-hole of the Marquis of Ripon by the official bouquetier? Last week it was all but decided that a very excellent officer should be appointed to the Viceroy's staff in the capacity of Secretary, vice Gordon, en route for China. The condition of Cashmere, the state of the Army, the report of the Commission, the future commands, and the organisation of military India are each and all subjects of the very highest Imperial moment, needing a diligent consideration founded on exact knowledge, professional intelligence, and deep interest on the part of those who have to decide upon them. No one supposes that Lord Hartington or Lord Ripon would venture to settle any considerable Anglo-Indian question "off their own bat," and the influence of a private Secretary in such cases, though it may depend a good deal on the personnel of the man, can never be insignificant when it is based on actual experiences and decided views. Mr. Primrose is, no doubt, in full possession of the share of family ability. His cousin, Lord Rosebery's brother, is performing the functions of a military attaché with a decent success which justifies the hope that the new Secretary to the Indian Government may be up to his work in course of time. But it is almost appalling to think that the fact of a young nobleman having subscribed largely to help a politician and political party to meet election expenses, should have a prodigious influence on the career of the great official satrap who represents the Empress of India to two hundred and fifty millions of her subjects. If the Earl of Rosebery had been indifferent, Mr. Primrose would have remained outside the circle of Indian questions, some of which are actually British and Imperial. It is, we believe, an open secret that Colonel Lyttelton Annesley, whose knowledge of India and Indians, and of military matters, is of exceptional depth and breadth, was named for the post vacated by Colonel Gordon, and that he would have accepted it, but that it was suddenly discovered that Lord Rosebery would like Mr. Primrose to fill the place, and that Colonel Annesley was a member of a political club, the members of which are not bound to support Mr. Gladstone.

The extract from the report of the Royal Commissioners presided over by Lord Penzance in 1876, which was vouched for in our impression of June 12 by a "General Officer," is the most important contribution to the discussion on Purchase officers' grievances which has yet appeared. That it should come to light now, after a lapse of four years, will surprise no one who is acquainted with the nonchalance of Line officers, even where their interests are vitally affected. Still less unexpected is it that the War Office, presuming on their ignorance or indifference, should, in the Warrant of 1877, cancel brevet promotion from an arbitrary date, after (what will be called officially) a generous respite of three years. This injustice, based on the somewhat wide discretion left by the Royal Commission to the War Office, is only in keeping with many other indefensible acts perpetrated of late, to the detriment of the much-enduring Line officers. The withholding of their purchase-money; placing them on a lower rate of pay than their fellows who have not purchased, but enjoy the same privileges; the refusal of purchase-money to the widows or children of those killed in action; the denial even of the compassionate allowances to their families, if they happen, in the judgment of the Secretary at War, to have sufficient to keep body and soul together; the rejection of Purchase colonels' applications for half-pay with the difference, because while serving at distant stations new rules affecting their position did not reach them in time to enable them to act upon them, in consequence of which they forfeited some thousands,—these and many other iniquities have made the War Office utterly untrustworthy, in the opinion of the Service. The feeling is that any evasion or subterfuge will be resorted to by the administrators of a nation having a strong pecuniary interest in the deaths of its officers, and ready to take advantage of the misfortunes of the dead or the helplessness of the living. From the speeches and thanks of Parliament, and from the utterances of the daily Press, the Army receives as full a share of treacle as it does of sulphur from its foes, civilised or savage; but it is not worthy of a great nation that its monster establishment in Pall Mall should be looked upon as a Military Do-the-boys' Hall, and while virtually admitting its own injustice, as Mr. Childers did in Lord Percy's discussion, refuse, on the mere ground of expediency, the wholesome and well-earned sustenance for which money and life have been freely expended. The extract given by "General Officer" proves on what unjustifiable grounds the Purchase captains and majors have been suddenly arrested in their promotion, and how entitled they are to the repeal or suspension of the clause depriving them of seniority brevets.

We have before us the report of Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., commanding the Canadian Militia for 1879. Even the most casual and unmilitary reader who may peruse the report cannot fail to be impressed with the conscientious and painstaking manner in which the task has been performed. The report covers some sixty pages, and embraces reflections upon the past and suggestions as to the future conduct of the active Militia force of our most important colony, The establishment of permanent training schools for cavalry and infantry officers and non-commissioned officers is strongly urged, and the question is asked, "Does not the proper organisation of a military force, including training for its officers and non-commissioned officers, devolve on a country, as much as the means of administering the laws which are carried out under its protection?" The Royal Military College is then noticed, and its progress and development are stated to have surpassed expectation. With a Staff of 13 professors, and an attendance of 80 cadets, the College may be said to be in full swing. The results of the training will be for the first time exemplified by the graduating class, whose term expires on June 25 next. Of the number (11), four are to be granted commissions in the Regular Army, and their career will be anxiously and closely watched by Canadians. The organisation of the District Staff is next touched upon, and the duties of the Deputy-Adjutant-Generals and Brigade-Majors detailed. Judging from the report, the duties cannot be onerous, and it is questionable if the Militia derives a benefit corresponding to the expenditure from this branch of the Service. It is recommended that a Quartermaster-General shall be appointed, to assist the Adjutant-General in the performance of his duties. If, in addition, a Deputy-Adjutant-General for each province were attached to the General Staff at head-quarters, a very considerable expense would be saved, as the District Staff could then be abolished. Attention is called to the gradual absorption of the reserve stock of arms, ammunition, and military stores, owing to the insufficient annual vote for renewals. In clothing, for instance, to properly uniform the nominal strength, 12,000 suits are required annually; but the vote only allows of the purchase of 6,000 suits every year. Complaint is also made that the purchase of ammunition for rifle associations being made from the reserve stock decreases the supply, and that the money being paid to the Receiver-General direct, the Militia gets no benefit from it. The conversion of the smooth-bore armaments into rifled guns on the Palliser principle and of the manufacture of small-arms ammunition within the Dominion, are dwelt upon at considerable length, as also the proper defence of the seaboard upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The ideas of the General as to the future may be summed up in the following sentences:—"To have an efficient Militia, sufficient funds must be provided to carry on the work regularly. It will not do to spend two millions one year and half a million the next; the vote should be a standing sum in time of peace, necessary to maintain a fixed force, with its staff and arms, ammunition, manufacture and conversion of cannon, clothing, magazines, educational establishments, and war material of every necessary description. Let the country deicde what it can afford to spend annually for defensive purposes, and then hold those responsible for its proper expenditure who are responsible for the efficiency of the force. If political considerations could be extinguished entirely from the Volunteer Force, the body itself more solidified by the reduction of the less efficient companies, the number of days' drill increased, the assembly of camps of exercise provided for, some rectifications in the pay, just claims for contingencies quickly liquidated, and primary schools provided for officers and non-commissioned officers, the active force would be sufficiently effective to all practical intents and purposes." These are surely no very great exactions, and it is to be hoped that the Canadian Government will take into serious consideration the recommendations of their chief military adviser. The General says in his valedictory address:—"In taking leave of the Militia, I must acknowledge the patience with which they have accepted my want of power more fully to promote the interests of a Service replete with a military spirit of the highest and most patriotic order."

M. Eugène Tenot has just written a work of considerable interest on the subject of the fortifications round Paris. It may be remembered that the fortifications which existed in 1870, when the Germans appeared before the French capital, were unable to prevent the city from being bombarded, and that shells were thrown over the detached forts of the south, up to the very walls of the Louvre. Mont Valérien was left untouched, but several other forts were seriously damaged, and when the capitulation was signed were hardly in a condition to resist an assault. The fortifications, as they existed in 1870, were the work of M. Thiers, who showed them with great glee to Lord Palmerston. They dated from 1840. A good many military men were opposed to their erection, but it is probable that what happened in 1814 was used as a decisive argument in favour of protecting Paris by artificial means. Napoleon was marching to the relief of Paris when he heard that his brother Joseph had signed a capitulation, and he afterwards declared that if the capital had only held out a few hours longer, it would have been saved. In 1870, the forts held out gallantly enough, but the Germans, with their new artillery, were able to fire clean over them. The consequence was that directly peace was signed, the question of raising new fortifications was mooted, and M. Thiers being President of the Republic, a new girdle was determined upon. The new fortifications, like the old ones, had their opponents. It was urged that they would cost vast sums of money, that it would be better to expend this money in arming the troops, that it was contrary to the genius of French troops to fight under cover, and that this system of fortifications would destroy all initiative on the part of commanding officers. But, on the other hand, another German invasion was greatly apprehended, and the Eastern frontier, after the loss of Metz and Strasbourg, for a long time offered no obstacle to an invading force. Concerning the new detached forts, some of which are ten miles from the enceinte, M. Tenot says that the leading idea of the engineers who planned them was to make them offensive as well as defensive. Forts, he remarks, should not only be able to prevent an enemy from penetrating into the place, but they should be so placed as to allow of the garrison, on a favourable opportunity, assuming the offensive. This is especially the case when such a city as Paris is concerned, or, in fact, any great city resembling an intrenched camp. Not only did the works of 1840, owing to the superior range of the new artillery, find themselves dominated in 1870 by higher positions, but built entirely for defensive purposes, they rendered all offensive operations on the part of the besieged impossible. Paris lies in a hollow, surrounded by a continuous circle of hills, and at no point, neither east, west, south, or north, were the crests of these hills in the power of the besieged. All these heights were at once seized upon by the Germans, and the French were thus placed at a disadvantage. No matter upon which side a sortie was attempted, it was a matter of escalading. This was the case at Champigny, and Montretont, and it is to this fact that M. Tenot attributed the want of energy exhibited during the siege of Paris. In his opinion, a more resolute commander than General Trochu would not have been able to break through the German lines; he would have only spilt a good deal of blood to no purpose. However, there were 500,000 armed men in Paris, and the beleaguering force at times did not amount to 100,000 men. The siege, too, lasted nearly six months, and during that time the Army of Paris lost fewer men than the Army of the Rhine lost in one day in the battles round Metz. The object pursued by the French engineers to-day, observes M. Tenot, is not only to place all portions of the great city beyond the range of the new artillery, and even improved artillery, and to prevent the besieging army from occupying heights more elevated than those occupied by the besieged, but also to insure the possibility of an offensive movement being made. The new detached forts are now nearly all completed, and, in the event of another siege, the Army of Paris will be able to debouch east, west, south, or north, under the guns of these forts; it will also debouch into a plain and have before it none of those obstacles which rendered the sorties of 1870 and 1871 so difficult to the French troops. It appears that at present there is only one weak point. M. Tenot says that on the lower Seine there are heights which command the new forts, and he strongly recommends that these should be occupied at no matter what price. To invest Paris now, remarks the author, the Germans would require three times as many troops as in 1870. They would not be able to establish head-quarters at Versailles (which is defended by the new girdle), nor their batteries at Montmorency, Chatillon, or Champigny, and consequently the opinion of the author is that the capital is safe, and that no such calamity as that of 1871 is likely to occur again.

To the sixteen names of Waterloo survivors drawing pay or pension from the War Office, which we inserted in our last impression, may be added the following retired officers, taken from Hart's annual Army List for this year:—Lieutenant-Colonel B. P. Browne (cornet 11th Dragoons); Colonels C. Cadell, K.H. (captain 28th Foot), J. R. Colthurst (lieutenant 32nd Regiment), W. Hewitt (captain 14th Regiment), J. Home (captain 3rd Dragoon Guards), Basil Jackson (lieutenant Royal Staff Corps), John Mulloy (lieutenant 95th Rifles), J. C. Webster (ensign 44th Regiment); Majors A. Bacon, W. S. Brady (sub-lieutenant 1st Life Guards), E. W. Drewe (lieutenant 27th Regiment), J. Fraser (lieutenant 71st Highlanders). Deducting from our last list the name of Lieutenant J. Robinson, who died last month, there appear to be twenty-seven surviving officers who were present at the great battle fought sixty-five years since, besides several others, probably, who have long since retired from the Service. We shall be glad to receive the names of any survivors—officers or men, and will publish their names as they reach us. Already we have received one communication on the subject, which we append. A correspondent writes from Beaconsfield:—"In the list you gave in your last number of the surviving officers who were at the battle of Waterloo, you omitted the name of my relative, Mr. Brice, an omission caused perhaps by his having long lived abroad. Mr. Brice served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and was at the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, and Waterloo. For some time he was on the Staff. His father, Colonel Brice, commanded a battalion of Coldstream Guards in Egypt, and was killed before Alexandria."

"Equity" writes:—"Your valuable paper has recently afforded space to ventilate the deep feeling of injustice that the remaining Purchase officers of the Army entertain at the approaching termination of brevet promotion, and each writer has advocated propositions to meet his own particular case. The matter cannot be, however, partially dealt with. When Purchase was abolished, there was but one only way in which it was possible to have carried out that great change in England's Military administration with honour, with equity, with justice, viz.,—by returning the Purchase officers their money. Their money has been kept, and faith of every kind has been broken with them. Last of all, in this brevet question. Purchase captains, of course, are more specially concerned in this. It is quite useless drawing a line anywhere. With other advantages, lieutenants purchased their companies, with brevet promotion in view. Purchase was the order of the day, and in saving their money, non-Purchase-corps men knew full well what they were about when they elected such lines of military life. Purchase men sunk their money for their promotion, and when Purchase was abolished and their prospective prospects were ruined, their money should have been returned them one and all. Brevet is to be abolished in October next, and brevet promotion to one and all the Purchase captains left is the only just way by which that law can be introduced. The Conservatives have carried out to the full the great Liberal programme of Army changes in all political etiquette. The originators are again in power, and the Premier whose War Minister promised and pledged his word that officers should be in no worse position by the proposed change, again reigns supreme, and in honour and in equity is now bound to redeem it. For it is beyond any shadow of doubt that the Purchase officers are in an immeasurably worse position in every way than they were before Purchase was abolished, and that if the proposed discontinuance of brevet promotion takes effect, it will be as the last straw in the old fable of the camel."

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. It has been finally arranged that the regiment shall proceed from Windsor to Aldershot at the end of the month for the drill season.

5th Dragoon Guards. "A Field-Officer of Heavies" writes:—"With all due deference to my good friends of the 5th Dragoon Guards, a regiment which I hear on all sides is in the highest state of discipline and efficiency, thanks to Lieut.-Col. Marsland and a body of zealous officers, I hold that it would be a most serious injustice to the old cavalry subalterns were the troop now vacant to be filled regimentally. It has to be remembered that there are several officers of long standing as subalterns who have served during the Afghan and Zulu campaigns, and surely one of these ought to be provided for, if the senior subalterns on the general list refuse the offer of promotion out of their own corps. I know a score of men senior both in age and service to Lieut. Lawrence, who would willingly join so deservedly popular a regiment as the 5th Dragoon Guards, where every gentleman is treated as such—this unfortunately is not always the case—and one of them ought to be selected, for it would be establishing a bad precedent to give promotion by strict seniority to youngsters of less than six years' service."

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Capt. Donnithorne completes his period of appointment as adjutant of the Herts Yeomanry Cavalry on the 30th inst.

4th Hussars. It is now decided that the regiment shall go to Aldershot at the end of the month, and encamp on Farnborough Common until the close of the drill season, when it will take over quarters in the Cavalry Barracks. "A Colonel of Infantry" writes:—"Having commanded a regiment at Aldershot not long ago, which had just returned from a tour of foreign service, I can endorse every word you say as to the undesirability of sending the 4th Hussars—a regiment the ranks of which are necessarily full of recruits—to Aldershot, and putting it under canvas. I know the work I and my officers had to keep our boy-soldiers in hand during the month or so they were occupying bell-tents. I flatter myself my regiment bears as good a reputation as any in the Service, and yet I blushed—literally blushed—when I saw what went on. I appealed to the Brigadier to assist me. He replied, 'Oh, it's no use doing anything now; wait until you get into barracks again. Every regiment is in the same state whilst it is encamped; and with such weather as we have been having, what can you expect?' But mine was an infantry battalion, and it may well be imagined that cavalrymen, having more duty to perform, feel the inconvenience of camp-life even more than their dismounted comrades. I am a great believer in Aldershot myself, but I think that the authorities work there on a wrong principle. My idea is that the incoming corps ought to march straight into barracks, and the outgoing occupy the canvas habitations, for they have had time to get used to the place, and would be better able to rough it. If this arrangement was only put on trial, I am sure it would be found to work well. At any rate, it would be better than the system now in vogue, which tries the best commanding officer, especially if he has young and inexperienced soldiers to deal with, as most officers have now-a-days."

5th Lancers. It has been definitely arranged to move the regiment to Aldershot for the drill season, where it will go under canvas on Cove Common. In August it will proceed to York, and replace the 4th Dragoon Guards.

8th Hussars. A wing of the regiment, under the command of Major Burke, and consisting of A, F, and G Troops, is out with Brigdr.-Gen. Gib's flying column from Pesh Bolak towards Hisárak. This force, besides the wing of the 8th, is composed of four guns of L Baty. 5th Brig. R.A., 450 of the 2-14th Foot, 50 sabres of the 5th Bengal Cavalry, and 250 of the 32nd Pioneers. It left at midnight on May 18, lightly equipped and without tents, and came up with 4,000 Shinwaries on the 20th, about 15 miles south of Jellalabad, and completely routed them, with the loss of 200 and several prisoners. The loss on our side was,—killed, two men of the 2-14th Foot; wounded severely, Lieut. Porteous and two men of L Baty. 5th Brig. R.A., five men of the 2-14th, and one man of the 32nd Pioneers; wounded slightly, Capt. Noyes, of the 2-14th. The enemy fled to the mountains, and the force engaged levelled their towers. They returned to camp on May 23.

9th Lancers. A correspondent writes from India:—"The World is not 'by way of being' a comic paper, but it generally affords us some amusement whenever 'Atlas' touches upon Indian Viceregal incidents. In the issue just to hand, he devotes a paragraph to Lord William Beresford, the perusal of which has evoked shrieks of laughter. 'Atlas' says:—'Lord William's immediate future is somewhat uncertain. After serving with his regiment at Cabul during the worst months of the winter, he was somewhat abruptly seconded, in being recalled to the plains to take up the duties of acting military secretary to the Viceroy.' (The italics are mine.) The facts are, that Lord William left Calcutta for Cabul just before Christmas, when the news of the action of Dec. 11 showed how badly off the 9th were for officers, and he was back again in Calcutta early in February, so that he could not have been with his regiment more than three weeks or a month altogether, if so long. He was not seconded in any way, abruptly or otherwise; he was not recalled to the plains, nor was he required to take up the duties of acting military secretary to the Viceroy, his former place as A.D.C. even having been already filled up. He simply returned on private leave. 'Atlas' goes on to say that on Lord Lytton's departure, 'Lord William will probably vacate his staff appointment, and not find himself in a position to return immediately to regimental employment.' This is delicious. It will be one of the cant phrases at Simla this year, and poor Lord William may expect frequent inquiries as to when he will find himself in a position to return to regimental duty." Our correspondent, we are sure, does not intend to reflect upon the zeal or readiness for work of such a thorough soldier as Lord William Beresford, whose career in Zululand confirmed the belief in his capacity which existed in India among his comrades before he went to the Cape. Probably Lord William Beresford would disapprove of the remarks about him as much as our correspondent does.

13th Hussars. Major and Brevet Col. Sir Baker Russell, K.C.M.G., C.B., left England on the 9th inst. for India, to assume command.

17th Lancers. Capt. Cooke has been granted an extension of leave to remain in England from India from the 3rd prox. to Jan. 2 next, on urgent private affairs. Qrmr. Shawe has left England for India, to rejoin his old regiment on exchange from the 5th Lancers, into which he was promoted from qrmr.-serjt. of the 17th in Feb. 1871.

19th Hussars. Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Twentyman did not go up for the entrance examination for the Staff College, which has just been held in London, as stated. Col. Twentyman will not unlikely join the Indian S.C. He would be an immense gain to the Indian Army, having been on the Staff in the Madras Presidency for several years, and earned golden opinions by his courtesy and the zeal he displayed in the discharge of his duties.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut. F. R. Thackeray has been confirmed in his appointment as 3rd subaltern of No. 1 Kohat Mountain Battery, Punjab Frontier Force, vice Lieut. A. C. Ballard, resigned.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Gen. Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., who was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to act in conjunction with Lord Odo Russell at the Berlin Supplementary Congress, left London on the evening of the 11th inst. for Berlin.

An address has been presented by the representatives of the Indian Guaranteed Railways to Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., C.B. The signatories express the high estimation in which they hold the broad and liberal policy which marked Sir Andrew Clarke's general administration of the Public Works Department of the Government of India, and their sense of the enlightened and liberal spirit which had pervaded the control of the Railway Branch of that department in particular. They felt that they would be wanting in due expression of this sentiment if they had permitted Sir Andrew to quit India without acknowledging the obligation they are under for the improved relations between the Government of India and the railway companies which have been established under his auspices. In reply, Sir Andrew says he attaches especial value to the testimony thus borne by gentlemen who represent the collective interest of the large body of capitalists who have contributed a hundred million sterling towards the material advancement of India. Sir Andrew is no less kindly remembered in the Straits Settlements than in India. The Singapore paper of May 8 contains the following about him:—"After the departure of Sir Andrew Clarke a strong and influential committee was formed for the purpose of adopting some testimonial in appreciation of his eminent services as governor during his short stay here. Sufficient funds were subscribed, but what shape the testimonial should take seems to have been a matter of difficulty, and it fell into abeyance. On Tuesday last, however, a meeting of the committee, Dr. Little in the chair, was held, and it was finally resolved that the testimonial should take the form of a portrait, to be hung in the town hall."

The special correspondent of the Standard telegraphs from Bombay on Monday night:—"As the Government refused official permission to Col. Gordon to go to China, he tendered the resignation of his commission before leaving India."

The appointment which Major G. E. Grover took up on vacating his position on the Intelligence Staff, was that of Secretary to the Royal Engineer Committee, not secretary to the Royal Engineer Institute, as stated last week, the latter appointment continues to be held by Major R. H. Vetch.

Grenadier Guards. The 1st Batn. will proceed to Aldershot at the end of the month from Chelsea Barracks, and will be encamped in the Guards' Enclosure for the drill season.

Scots Guards. The 1st Batn. will proceed at the end of the month from Shorncliffe to Aldershot, for the drill season.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., completes his five years in command of the 2nd Batn. on Wednesday next. Col. Bray is the senior lieutenant-colonel in the Army commanding a regiment, having obtained his commission as ensign as far back as June, 1839—41 years ago.

5th Fusiliers. Lieut. Thornhill, 1st Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., officiating wing-officer 37th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C. from March 21, 1879.

14th Regiment. Lieut. and Qrmr. Bayley, 2nd Batn., may be expected to arrive in England shortly from Afghanistan, to take up the duties of quartermaster to the 4th West York Militia and 10th Brigade Depôt, for which post he has been selected.

17th Regiment. Lieut. Carleton, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-officer of the Deolee Irregular Infantry, on probation.

24th Regiment. An appeal was made at the garrison churches at Dover on Sunday for funds for a Christian church which it is proposed to erect to the memory of the regiment on the site of the unfortunate engagement of that regiment at Isandlwana in the late Zulu campaign. The appeal received considerable support.

27th Inniskillings. Capt. Buxton, who has been posted for duty as garrison-instructor at York, will leave Dublin on Tuesday next.

35th Regiment. We much regret to announce the death, on the 11th inst., of Major E. R. B. Barnes, at Kimberley, South Africa. Major Barnes was the youngest son of the late Major J. Barnes, J.P. and D.L. for Radnorshire, of Presteign, formerly of the Royal Horse Guards, with which regiment he served in the Peninsula, and received the medal and three clasps. He afterwards commanded the Royal Radnor Militia for many years. Major E. R. B. Barnes entered the Service, June 24, 1853, as ensign in the 37th Foot, having served as a volunteer in the Kaffir war of 1851-53 (medal). He exchanged into the 35th Foot with Capt. (now Col., h.p., late 20th Foot) J. Davis, Jan. 29, 1861, and was only gazetted major on Feb. 10 last, on the death at Malta of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Blyth. He volunteered to go out to the Cape last year, and remained after the conclusion of the war, with a view to Colonial employment, as under the new system he was debarred from ever succeeding to the command of his regiment. At the time of his death he held the appointment of Commissioner at Christiana, but had just received the news of his promotion, and orders to return home. In Major Barnes the Service has lost a most valuable soldier, and one who at all times did his duty conscientiously, and strove to promote in every way the interests of his profession, to which he was most devotedly attached. Brevet Major Grattan will most probably succeed to the majority, after twenty-five years' service.

42nd Highlanders. The idea of moving the regiment to Aldershot for the drill season has, we believe, been abandoned.

43rd Light Infantry. Lieut. Kerrich is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 1st Madras Light Cavalry, on probation. Serjt.-Major McEwen, 2nd Shropshire R.V.C., late qrmr.-serjt. in the above, has recently been presented by the officers of his late regiment with a valuable and most beautiful silver tea service, in token of their esteem on his leaving the Army.

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. E. W. G. Byam and the detachment Royal Marines serving on board the Resistance will not be relieved, as previously ordered, but turn over to the Defence. Capt. R. W. Heathcote, R.M.L.I., has disembarked from the Duke of Wellington and joined the Plymouth Division, on promotion. The following lieutenants, R.M.L.I., have passed the examinations at Chatham head-quarters:—F. E. Hast, T. J. P. Evans, and G. T. Onslow, for the rank of captain; and H. C. Fraser, C. G. Brittan, and J. R. Oldfield, for the increased pay of their rank.

The Admiralty have approved of the following officers, non-commissioned officers, buglers, gunners, and privates, Royal Marines, proceeding to Wimbledon for duty at the ensuing meeting of the National Rifle Association:—To proceed on the 29th inst. from Gosport—Capt. C. H. Scafe, Lieut. E. E. Pyne, 2 serjeants, 2 corporals, 1 bugler, 56 privates. To proceed on the 8th prox. from Plymouth—Major Ozzard, 2 serjeants, 4 privates. To proceed on the 9th prox.—R.M.A., Capt. V. D. Mathias and a lieutenant, 8 serjeants, 1 corporal, 1 bugler, 50 gunners; R.M.L.I., Capts. H. J. L. Norcocks and R. H. Dwyer, Lieuts. L. Edye, W. J. Langford, A. E. Houghton, R. Denny, and H. O. P. Wright. Chatham—6 serjeants, 22 privates. Portsmouth—5 serjeants. Plymouth—6 serjeants.

The report of the examination of lieutenants R.M.L.I., under military instruction at the R.M.A. Barracks, Eastney, from January to June, states that L. J. Hadley gained 240 points, and that his sketches were good; C. H. Willis, 233, sketches very good; C. G. Matson, 202, sketches good; H. H. Roberts, 191, sketches fair; R. F. G. Percy, 163, sketches fair; W. H. Palmer, 156, sketches good; G. R. C. Booth, 150, sketches fair; H. P. Tate, 145, sketches good.

A match was fired at Browndown, on the 15th inst., between H.M.S. Excellent and the Royal Marine Artillery. This was the ninth match between them, and the R.M.A. scored their ninth victory.

60th Rifles. The 1st Batn. leaves Winchester at the end of the month for Aldershot, and will be encamped in the Guards' Enclosure during the drill season. Capt. Crosbie, 1st Batn., reverts to regimental duty on the 1st prox. from the staff of Gen. Sir T. Steele, at Aldershot.

76th Regiment. Capt. Gore has obtained the permission of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to retain his position as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. A. K. Gore, Madras S.C., formerly of the British Burmah division of the Madras Army.

79th Highlanders. Closely following on the death of 2nd Lieut. the Hon. C. Cathcart, which occurred in London on the 21st ult., comes the announcement of the death of another subaltern, Lieut. C. C. Mackenzie, which occurred at Gibraltar on the 15th inst. The deceased, who was the only son of Sir Evan Mackenzie, of Kilcoy, Bart., entered the Army Sept. 2, 1868, and became Lieut. Oct. 28, 1871.

80th Regiment. Major Creagh, who is employed as Assistant-Commissioner in Leydenberg, South Africa, is to continue in his appointment for a further period of three months. It is not improbable that Major Creagh will apply for retirement, in order that he may continue in colonial employ.

93rd Highlanders. Capt. Welch has left the depôt at

94th Regiment. Capt. Brooke has taken over the duties of adjt. of the Armagh Militia, during its period of training.

104th Fusiliers. Capt. Murray has joined the depôt for two years.

107th Regiment. Major Goad has applied for permission to retire on the pension of his rank.

2nd West India Regiment. The Irish Times says:—"The Secretary of State for the Colonies has approved unconditionally of the transfer of Col. Sir W. O. Lanyon, K.C.M.G., from the Administratorship of Griqualand West to that of the Transvaal, in succession to Sir T. Shepstone, K.C.M.G." But surely Sir Owen Lanyon has not been near Griqualand West since he finished the war there, and has been at Pretoria for the last year, at least.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

2nd South Devon. After having been encamped within Crown Hill Fort, Devonport, for its annual training, the regiment was dismissed on Saturday last. The men returned their stores to the depôt at Egg Buckland Fort, and then marched to the Mutley Barracks, where they were paid off. The strength was 671, including about 300 recruits, a stronger muster than during any previous year. A considerable number of men have passed into the ranks of the Regular Army.

Hampshire Artillery. Col. Inglefield has applied for permission to add a couple of batteries to his regiment, which bears the reputation of being one of the smartest and best ordered Militia regiments in the kingdom.

Royal London. We notice in the Gazette of Friday last the resignation of Col. Sir William Anderson Rose, who, we regret to say, owing to ill-health, is unable to continue in command of the regiment, which, under him, for the last eleven years, has attained the highest state of drill and discipline. We publish the farewell address of Sir William on his retirement, and appointment by her Majesty as honorary colonel of the regiment:—"Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen having been pleased to appoint me honorary colonel of the Royal London Militia, I feel I cannot relinquish my active duties as its commandant without expressing to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men my most sincere gratitude for the untiring support I have at all times received from one and all. But I feel the illness from which I am suffering will not allow me to continue the duties from which I derived so much pleasure. I therefore pass from the active to the passive list, and in handing over the command to Lieut.-Col. Dundas, I do so with a certainty that I am reposing a trust in one who is well worthy of such an honour, and who, as a soldier, will carefully guard the interest and welfare of the regiment. I am proud that I am still, by her Majesty's gracious pleasure, to remain as your colonel, and that the tie that has existed between us for the last eleven years is not to be severed; and in wishing you all, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, 'farewell' as your late commandant, I hope I may be spared for many years to be with you as your colonel."

Royal Sussex. Major W. R. Fuller, late of this regiment, died at Southsea, after a long and painful illness, on the 12th inst.

4th West York. Lieut. and Qrmr. Bayley, 2nd Batn. 14th Foot, has been selected for the appointment of quartermaster.

South Cork. Lieut. Lucas has been appointed instructor of musketry.

1st Royal Jersey. The Jersey Express of the 15th inst. contains the following remarks, with which we fully agree:—"We understand that a Militia court of inquiry sat to-day at the St. Lawrence Arsenal, to ascertain the authors of the insolent expressions used on a recent parade of the West Regiment, when some of the men under arms, or just after their dismissal, called out 'dry pockets' after their officers, because these latter had not supplied them with so much money for refreshments as some of the other companies had. We have not heard the result of this inquiry, which must necessarily be an informal one, as the provisions of the present law fully provide for such cases; and without prejudging one way or the other the conduct of the offenders, we may say that it is the outcome of the vicious practice which has obtained for some time in Militia companies for officers to supply the men with 'backsheesh,' or pourboire, as the latter word will be better understood, on the occasion of any extraordinary parade, the result being that now, unless the officers submit to be blackmailed in this way, the men insult them in the manner above described. If the Militia is to be maintained in its present condition, it would be far better to pay the men for their day's drill, than to perpetuate a practice which must lead to pernicious results."

Of the 159 regiments called out this year, 59 have now completed their training. The regimental training in several cases commenced in April, and in some will not end before September. A feature of this year's training is the unusually large number of regiments which have gone, or are going, under canvas for the full period at Aldershot and other places.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Denbighshire Hussars. This fine cavalry regiment, which, notwithstanding the adverse causes which have affected the Yeomanry generally for some little time past, is almost up to its full strength, assembled at Denbigh on Saturday last for eight days' permanent duty, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Leyland Naylor (late 2nd Life Guards), with the following officers, the only absent officer being 2nd Lieut. Loftus, who is abroad, on the staff of Lord Augustus Loftus, the Governor of New South Wales: Major Barnes, Brookside, Chirk; A (or Llangollen) Troop, with Capt. Whalley, M.P. (late R.N.), and 2nd Lieuts. Crofton (late 5th Lancers) and Cotton; B (or Wrexham) Troop, with Capt. McCalmont (late 8th Hussars), A.D.C. to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Lieut. Ormrod, and 2nd Lieut. Mellor; C (or Ruthin) Troop, with Capt. Mousley and 2nd Lieuts. Parry and Blizzard; D (or Denbigh) Troop, with Capt. Mesham (late Royal Dragoons) and Lieuts. Buddicom and Williams, Brevet Major R. F. Morrison (5th Lancers) (capt. supernumerary), Capt. and Adjt. Creagh (7th Dragoon Guards), and Surg. Eyton-Jones, M.D. The regiment was to have been inspected yesterday by Col. the Hon. C. W. Thesiger, inspector of auxiliary cavalry, northern district.

Hampshire, under command of Lieut.-Col. Sir H. St. John Mildmay, Bart., assembled at Abbott's Barton on the 2nd inst., and marched into Winchester, headed by the mounted band, for its eight days' training. The regiment mustered about 200, which is an improvement on the total of two years ago. The men presented a very smart and soldierly appearance, and were exceedingly well horsed. Both mounted and foot drills were gone through daily, the former on Twyford Downs and the latter in a field belonging to Mr. G. Hall, in Hyde Street. The regiment was inspected by Col. Blundell, inspector of Auxiliary Cavalry, when the inspecting officer congratulated the men on the manner in which they had gone through their work. The head-quarters were at the Royal Hotel. The following officers were present with the regiment:—Capts. Beach, M.P., Broun, Bonham-Carter, Jervoise, Waterhouse, and Turner-Turner; Lieuts. Lamb, Jervoise, Hargreaves, and Pole; Sub-Lieuts. Smith, Carr, and Woods; Major and Adjt. Powell, and Surg. England, M.D.

Up to the present time 27 out of the 39 regiments of Yeomanry have completed their training, the last dismissed being the Denbighshire, at Denbigh, yesterday. Those yet to assemble are the Ayrshire, at Ayr, on Monday; the Lanarkshire, at Lanark, on Friday next; the Middlesex, at Twickenham, on July 17; the Montgomeryshire, at Welshpool, on September 23; the Northumberland, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, July 16; North Somerset, at Bath, Sept. 18; Queen's Own Worcestershire, at Worcester, Sept. 9; and the 2nd West York, at Harrogate, July 26. The Duke of Lancaster's Own assembled yesterday (Friday) at Lancaster, and the Pembroke at Haverfordwest on the previous day.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

1st Orkney Artillery. The brigade has suffered a great loss lately by the resignation of Lieut.-Col. Burroughs, C.B., who has commanded it since Nov. 1873, and has now been required by the War Office to vacate his appointment, on obtaining promotion to the rank of major-general in the Army. Gen. Burroughs, who joined the brigade immediately upon his retirement upon half-pay, from command of the 93rd Highlanders, was held in the highest esteem by all ranks, who recognised in him an officer whose constant study it was to raise the brigade both as regards numbers and efficiency.

5th Cheshire Rifles. Thanks to the exertions of Major Terry, the late adjutant, the regiment was enabled last year to publish its records up to the end of 1878. Capt. Wylie, 60th Rifles, who has made a most able successor to Major Terry, has decided to continue the work inaugurated by his predecessor, and has just issued an addenda to the history, giving particulars of all events in connection with the regiment for the year 1879. The 5th Cheshire is one of the strongest regiments in the Northern District, and under Sir Charles Shakerley's command has earned quite a reputation for soldierly instinct, over 1,000 men voluntarily undertaking, year after year, a week's work under canvas.

1st Lancashire Rifles. Lord Derby, hon. colonel, and the officers gave a dinner at Liverpool on the 11th inst. to Lieut.-Col. Bousfield, in celebration of the completion of his 21st year of service with the regiment. "Beta" writes, from Bath:—"May I beg to offer a few remarks relative to a paragraph in your paper of last Saturday, in which, while referring to the letter signed 'Edward Sullivan' that appeared lately in the Times, you point to the services of Lord Bury, Lord Ranelagh, and the Marquis of Westminster, as Volunteer officers whom the Government might confer distinctions on for long and valuable service? Permit me to name another officer—Lieut.-Col. Bousfield, late M.P. for Bath, who organised a Volunteer corps in Liverpool as far back as 1853. He lead the movement, and promoted it, by his zeal and example, at a time when periodical panics roused the nation to the necessity of defence. This corps, officially accepted by Government in 1859 (1st Lancashire Rifle Volunteers), he still commands, and most assuredly his name would stand prominently first on the list for rewards, should it please her Majesty to decorate the officers of the Volunteer Service, in which he has devoted, uninterruptedly, 27 years of his life."

3rd London Rifles. "A Captain of Artillery" writes:—"I am sorry to say I can endorse all you and your correspondents have stated with regard to the unsoldierlike behaviour of the men of the 3rd London when off duty. I had occasion to pass on Saturday last, in uniform, with a brother-officer, from King's Cross to Holborn Circus. We met on the way a number of Volunteers in uniform, principally of the 3rd London, 37th, and 40th Middlesex, and strange to say, no man of the 3rd London paid us the slightest compliment, or attempted to do so, though, to the credit of the two corps last mentioned be it said, not one of their men neglected to salute; and they did it in all cases in a smart and soldierlike manner. Knowing Col. Laurie and Major Boyce, as I do personally, I feel sure the fault is not theirs, but they should see to the matter, and issue a regimental order on the subject, for it is a pity for so good a regiment to earn a bad name, as it is doing."

19th Middlesex Rifles. Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., has accepted the honorary colonelcy of Lieut.-Col. Oxley's regiment, now one of the strongest and smartest corps in the metropolis, as was shown at last Saturday's inspection, when the regiment turned out in great force, and passed through the ordeal in a most praiseworthy manner. We should be glad to find other general officers following the Quartermaster-General's example, and associating themselves with the Volunteer Force, which would derive considerable benefit from their presence as honorary colonels of regiments.

38th Middlesex (Artists') Rifles. Lieut.-Col. Sir F. Leighton, P.R.A., has applied to the War Office for permission for four companies of his regiment to take part in the summer manœuvres with the Regular troops at Aldershot, from July 31 to Aug. 7, inclusive.

49th Middlesex (Post-Office) Rifles. We understand that the applications from Volunteer regiments for permission to go to Aldershot this year are so numerous, that it is probable preference will be given to those who have not previously had an opportunity of tasting the sweets of the Long Valley. There are several regiments in the metropolis—which, by-the-by, always sends the largest portion of the 4,000 or 5,000 annually—to whom a refusal would be particularly disappointing; for instance, the Post-Office corps, under Lieut.-Col. Du Plat Taylor, which has always put in an appearance, and several others equally well known. Thursday was the last day on which applications could be made, so that the various regiments interested will probably not have to wait long for a reply.

4th West York (Hull) Artillery. Lieut.-Col. Commandant Humphrey has just been ordered by the War Office to resign his commission before July 20, and the announcement of this fact has had an unlooked-for result. A court of inquiry was recently held in Hull, and the decision of the War Office was that the junior lieutenant-colonel and three captains should be ordered to resign. The feeling between the junior lieutenant-colonel and the commandant has been very high, and opinion has been much exercised in the corps on the matter. The commandant announced to a private meeting of the corps this week that the late Secretary for War had left such a strong protest against himself on the minutes, that H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief had been unable to reconsider the matter. It was resolved, therefore, by the meeting that they would refuse to serve under any other colonel, and that the finance committee should be instructed to wind up the finances of the corps. Repeated cheers were given for Col. Humphrey, and Major White, who endeavoured to address the men, was unable to obtain a hearing. It is also stated that 12 out of 18 officers, feeling that Col. Humphrey has been disgracefully treated by the War Office, have expressed their intention of resigning.

Army signalling is becoming so attractive a feature in the work of Volunteer regiments throughout the country, that it promises to become, like the ambulance and other ideas with the same end, part of the ordinary routine of the year.

The results of the match for the National Challenge Trophy, at Edinburgh, on Monday, are not so satisfactory as had been anticipated, especially for the Scottish team, who in preliminary practice had beaten the score which last year gave victory to England for the tenth time. Major Waller made the most judicious selection possible for his twenty, and the same remark applies to the leaders of the Scotch and Irish teams; but notwithstanding the weather was just what was desired, England's score was 13 points less than at Wimbledon; Scotland was 33 points behind, and Ireland made 84 points less than the former total. An analysis of the scores gives two "h.p.s.," four 34's, eight 33's, and numerous 32's, 31's, and 30's.

INDIA.

Col. H. Forbes and Major R. H. Hudleston, Bengal S.C., have applied for permission to retire from the Service on the pension of their ranks.

The Governor-General of India in Council, under instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India in Council, is pleased to announce that the grant of the medal with clasp for "Jowaki" shall be limited to those troops who were engaged in active operations in the field against the Jowaki Afridees between Nov. 9, 1877, and Jan. 19, 1878, inclusive. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is requested to cause the medal-rolls to be prepared accordingly.

The Standard says:—"Gen. Sir Frederick Haines has no intention of resigning the command of the Indian Army, as has been stated, but will remain in India until early next year."

The following is the Farewell Order issued by Lieut.-Gen. Sir D. Stewart, K.C.B., on his departure from Candahar:—"Camp Hyder Kheyl, April 27, 1880.—As the Lieutenant-General commanding is about to be temporarily separated from the Candahar Field Force with which he has been so long associated, he desires to place on record his appreciation of the services performed by the troops constituting the force since the commencement of field operations. The discipline and high spirit of the troops before the enemy, the patience with which they have met exposure and privation, as well as their fortitude during a period of sickness, merits special notice. To the cordial good-fellowship which has animated all ranks, and to the soldierly qualities displayed, the success which has attended the force must be mainly attributed. Sir Donald Stewart desires to thank the soldiers who have served under his command for the forbearance they have shown towards the natives of Afghanistan ever since the frontier was crossed, and for the exemplary good-conduct they have displayed in garrison and in the field. To Brigdr.-Gen. R. J. Hughes, to Brigdr.-Gen. G. R. Palliser, C.B., to Brigdr.-Gen. R. Barter, to Col. A. C. Johnson, R.H.A., comy., to Capt. Larminie, R.E., officiating commander, R.E., to officers commanding batteries and regiments, and companies of Sappers and Miners, and to the individual officers serving under their orders, the Lieutenant-General would express his grateful sense of their efforts to maintain a high standard of soldierly excellence in the force since he has had the honour to command it. His thanks are due to Lieut.-Col. E. F. Chapman, D.A.L., Q.M.G.; Major A. G. Handcock, A.A.G.; Capt. A. Gaselee, A.Q.M.G.; Capt. L. Bishop, D.A.Q.M.G.; Capt. Tytler, D.J.A-G.; Capt. W. V. Ellis, provost marshal; Major M. H. Nicolson, brigade-major, 2nd Infantry Brigade; Capt. R. Chaloner, brigade-major, 1st Brigade; Major R. G. Bird, brigade-major, Cavalry Brigade; Capt. F. Call, field-engineer; Lieut. C. Hoskyns, assistant-field-engineer; Lieut. Dickie, R.E., superintendent, and the assistant-superintendents of Army Signalling. The Lieutenant-General and the entire force are under extreme obligations to Deputy-Surg.-Gen. A. Smith, C.B., and to all the officers of the Army and Indian Medical Departments, for the admirable arrangements made at Candahar and in the field for the care of the sick and wounded. The devotion with which the medical officers of the force laboured during the cholera season last summer deserves particular mention; to Major C. Cowie, R.A., comy. of Ordnance, and to the officers of the Ordnance Department; to Capt. F. Hughes and the officers of the Commissariat Department; to Capt. W. A. Lawrence and the officers of the Transport Department. All ranks will gratefully recall the unfailing attention of the Rev. F. Warneford and Rev. Father Allen to their duties during a period of sickness, and Sir D. Stewart desires to thank them in the name of the Force for their labours. The services of Major Euan Smith, C.S.I., and Major Clifford, Q.P.C., Political Officers with the Force upon the line of march, have been of special value. When he held the post of Road Commandant at Candahar, Major Clifford's management of the road was a material help. Lieut. Gore, R.E., of the Survey of India, has been indefatigable in the execution of survey work, which is of much importance, and the Lieut.-Gen. would acknowledge the good services he has rendered."

THE HALF-PAY OFFICERS' CASE.

"A Late Captain, Royal Canadian Rifles," writes:—"I was indeed most pleased to find you referred last week to the case of Capt. Savage, of the 64th, who, all must allow, has been most shamefully treated by the Government, considering the circumstances of his military career. But one case even more disgraceful still—if such a thing is possible—promises to occur shortly, when Brevet Major Helden, C.M.G., retires from the 100th Regt. Capt. Savage, with whom I served several years in the Royal Canadian Rifles, is a most meritorious officer, and his case cannot fail to command the sympathy of everybody who knows anything of the working of the present Act. But if he is badly treated, what will be said of Major Helden, when he retires? Capt. Savage has seen no service before the enemy, Major Helden has, for he served in the Ashantee campaign, where he greatly distinguished himself, and earned a C.M.G., brevet majority, and sword of honour. Yet he, on retirement, will receive only the same terms as a post-Purchase captain. He will get no over-regulation, and only £200 a year, whereas other officers who obtained their companies prior to the abolition of Purchase, as he did, receive £259. Why the difference? Because he, as a reduced officer of the late 3rd West India Regiment, happened to be on half-pay,—compulsory half-pay, be it remembered,—when Lord Cardwell carried through his measure for the abolition of Purchase. I take up the case of this officer unknown to him, to show how thoroughly justified the officers of reduced regiments are in considering themselves unfairly treated. It is simply wonderful to me that Ministers can be found to stand by and allow such gross injustice to be perpetrated. Whatever grievances other classes of officers may have, it must be clear to any person of ordinary intellect that the reduced officers—in this category I would include all those given unattached promotion as a reward for service—have a substantial ground of complaint, and I shall yet hope to find that some Service champion has espoused the cause of this very deserving and much oppressed body. I may add that I have no further interest in the matter myself, having left the Service some years ago. I simply write in the interest of a number of brother-officers, who I cannot help regarding as the greatest sufferers of any from the abolition of Purchase."

According to the Panama Star, on the night of May 1, a tremendous explosion took place in Ancon, Peru. A large torpedo, of new proportions, and of extraordinary power, which was in process of completion, at the manufactory of those instruments, exploded accidentally, with a report like the roar of a battery of heavy guns, and a concussion of tremendous violence, shaking every house in the town, breaking all the glass in the windows, and spreading alarm through the population generally. The manufactory was blown to pieces, and every inmate destroyed. Six houses adjoining were levelled to the ground, walls, roofs, woodwork, furniture, &c., broken to pieces, and utterly ruined. Half-a-dozen other houses which joined on these shared nearly the same fate, and were almost completely levelled to the ground. Of the houses destroyed, not a stone remains upon another, nor even the cement is to be found. The street pavements were broken up, and everything reduced to complete ruin and desolation. Of the persons engaged in the manufacture of the torpedo, scarcely a vestige was to be found. Portions of bodies, impossible of identification, were found at some distance from the scene of the explosion, in addition to which five bodies have been recovered. The torpedo, at the time of the explosion, was in charge of Lieut. Cardenas, of the Peruvian Navy, a citizen of the Argentine Republic named Martinez, and two or three other persons whose names are not reported. One of the workmen left the building on an errand of some sort a few moments before the explosion, and hurrying back when the terrible report rang out through the city, was struck with terror to see that every trace of the manufactory and of his fellow workmen had disappeared. The cause of the explosion is, of course, unknown.

A general meeting of the patrons and stewards of the forthcoming military tournament at the Agricultural Hall, in aid of the funds of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, took place at the United Service Institution on Thursday, for the purpose of receiving a report as to the arrangements. Major-Gen. Burnaby, M.P., the hon. secretary, stated that it was proposed to open at the Agricultural Hall, on Monday next, a grand military tournament and mounted and dismounted assaults of arms, and to continue the same daily till the 26th inst. The entries, it was stated, were being completed, and the meeting was open to officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Army, Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers.

We are requested to state that the annual muster-parade of the Corps of Commissionaires will take place on Sunday next, the 20th inst., in Westminster Hall, at 10 a.m., when the corps will be inspected by the Military Secretary, Lieut.-Gen. E. A. Whitmore, C.B. We trust that the services which have been rendered to the public and to the Army by Capt. Walter, who founded this admirable corps, will be some day recognised, but at present all the reward he seeks is probably that which is derived from the success of his labours.

The annual inspection of her Majesty's Body Guard of Yeomen of the Guard took place on Tuesday, in the garden of St. James's Palace. The parade was formed at half-past 12 o'clock, under the command of Lord Monson, the captain. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived about 1 o'clock, and made a very careful inspection of the ranks, at the conclusion of which he expressed himself highly gratified with the appearance of this fine body of veterans. The following officers were present with the corps:—Lieut.-Col. Need, the lieutenant; Lieut.-Col. Patterson, Capt. Morley, and Col. H. Hume, C.B., the exons; and Lieut.-Col. Sutton, the clerk of the cheque and adjutant.

LORD NORTHBROOK is to be congratulated in having decided that the meeting of the Atalanta Committee shall be in London, for there was no hiding the fact that the suggestion that the inquiry should be conducted at Portsmouth by a board on which the Naval element predominated, was not received with satisfaction by the public. We did not fail to call attention to this fact both on May 22 and May 29, and are, therefore, glad that the Admiralty should have yielded to the wishes of the country in making the inquiry a truly public and open one. There is, we may feel sure, no desire to keep back any information which it may be desirable to place before the Committee, and we understand that the chairman, Admiral Ryder, has been busily employed in taking from a vast number of papers of all descriptions, bearing upon the selection of the Atalanta and her equipment for training service, such documents as he is of opinion will be of service to the Committee. Arrangements have also been made for having papers printed, so that the Committee may be enabled the more easily to digest the voluminous reports which will be placed in their hands; and should all be ready on Monday, it is proposed to open the Court on that day at the Sessions House at Westminster. Officers who served in the ship in bygone years, when she was the Juno, have been requested to attend and give evidence, if needed, as to her performances when she was fully equipped with her armament on board; and those who were in her on her first cruise as the Atalanta training-ship will also be at hand to state their opinion as to the sea-going qualities of the ship. The greatest interest will be felt at the production of the late Captain Stirling's reports upon the performances of the ship, and his recommendations for alterations on arriving at Portsmouth, after his first cruise in her. There is a general belief that he complained of the ship, and that his suggestions were not complied with, but that they were over-ruled at Whitehall. It is upon this point that much will depend. The position of the Department in the eyes of the public may be much influenced by the result of the inquiry in regard to it, and if the loss of the Atalanta should gain for Naval officers a little more consideration at the hands of those in office, something will have been gained, even though at so great a cost. The opinions of officers in command are too frequently lightly set aside, and suggestions for improving the sea-going qualities of a ship are apt to be looked upon as complaints by those who have superintended her equipment. We hope that the inquiry now ordered may not show that there was any unwillingness to adopt the suggestions of Captain Stirling, or that he was sent to sea with his ship not as seaworthy as he would have desired. As regards the bereaved relatives of those lost in the ship, arrangements have now been made for opening a fund at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, and it has been officially notified that there were 265 petty officers, men, and boys on board, who have left twenty-eight widows destitute, and a very large number of orphans and dependent parents and other relatives. Up to the present time no traces of the ship have been discovered, nor has any message from her been picked up, the latest report of the find of a bottle on the coast of Massachusetts being another of those hoaxes which set one's fingers itching to administer a dose of the cat to the dastardly perpetrators. The raft passed by the Scotia Queen, which was first fully believed to be a relic of the Atalanta, owing to the bodies in white jumpers which were also seen about the same time, does not now appear to have had any connection with the ill-fated ship, as the master of the Scotia Queen is reported to state that the raft was formed of square balks of timber, such as would not be carried by the Atalanta. The Admiralty have received a report of the particulars gathered from the master and crew of the Scotia Queen by the commanding officer of the Castor, and it would be some satisfaction to the public if their Lordships would cause the same to be published. The mystery which attaches to the disappearance of the Atalanta is being made the subject of remark in a Brighton contemporary, which insinuates that the Admiralty is in full possession of particulars as to the fate of the ship and the scene of the disaster. But these remarks are written in so vague and unsatisfactory a manner as to throw the utmost discredit upon them, and we would suggest that if the editor has any such information as he would try to make his readers believe, he should speak out, and not indulge in mysterious hints that the Admiralty are as well acquainted with her exact position as they are with that of "St. Paul's or the Brighton Pavilion." It is little short of cruel to those who had relatives on board to give currency to such reports.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will hold a Levée at one o'clock on Thursday, July 1, at the Horse Guards, Whitehall, the number being limited to 150. Applications to attend should be addressed to the Military Secretary.

Sir George Colley, with £5,000 a year as Governor of Natal, &c., will be in a very different position from his predecessors. Till he arrived, General Clifford was acting Governor of Natal, and Colonel Lanyon was Administrator of the Transvaal, but the former is now in the ludicrous position of General-in-Command of four companies of foot (her Majesty's 91st Regiment) at the Cape, where there is staff enough for a division; whilst Sir George Colley, his junior, is his superior in civil and military functions and authority. Sir O. Lanyon, as Administrator of the Transvaal, is under Sir George Colley. Although the latter is not to be Governor of the Transvaal, the Administrator is to be under Sir George Colley's control, and to take his orders, and official correspondence is to be addressed to him. This arrangement is not at all likely to please the Boers, who will think they are placed under the thumb of the Government of Natal, and will not tend to appease their discontent, or to induce them to believe in the assurances that they are to be entrusted with a share in the government of the Transvaal as soon as possible.

The treatment of the officers of the Household Cavalry by the Master of the Buckhounds at Ascot has been much spoken of. It has been the custom to invite the officers at Windsor to the Course, where they were favoured with admission to the much-coveted quadrangle in front of the Royal Stand, but on the recent occasion the privilege was withheld in a very singular and arbitrary fashion.

We understand that the Portuguese Mission which recently arrived at St. Petersburg, early applied to the Russian Government for specimens of the arms, ammunition, and military stores in use in the Russian Army, and in reply received such a liberal supply, that the Minister, for want of store-room, was obliged to beg General Miliutin to stay his hand, until he could send off a consignment or two to Lisbon. It is too much to expect the English Government to make a similar application, although such is our poverty of specimens of Russian arms and equipment, that we do not possess a single modern Russian rifle—not even a common Berdan—in the Military Repository at Woolwich.

The Army Veterinary School at Aldershot has now been opened, under the direction of Veterinary-Surgeon J. Lambert. The first course of lectures commenced on Thursday. The necessary Warrant providing for the professor and staff has been drafted for some time, and would doubtless have appeared some time ago had not the arrangements been somewhat disturbed by the change of Government.

Surgeon-Major R. Tobin has been appointed Assistant-Professor of Military Surgery at the Army Medical School, Netley, vice Surgeon-Major F. P. Staples.

Colonels Burnaby, Grenadier Guards, and Roberts, 5th Fusiliers, were promoted in the Gazette last week to the rank of Major-General. This has worked off the list of Colonels, so far as the Line is concerned, for 1869. Colonel W. Rickman, half-pay, late of a Brigade Depôt, now stands first for General's rank. The list of 1870 contains the names of sixteen officers, and it is natural to suppose that these will all have been promoted by this time next year. General Burnaby will be missed in the Guards, but we are glad to think the Service may find the advantage of his having more time at his disposal to advocate its interests in another place.

Nine steps have passed since the beginning of the year to the Line colonels, whilst in the same period of last year only three promotions were gazetted. In face of these facts even Mr. Trevelyan must allow that promotion is not too rapid. The War Office has lost no opportunity of absorbing vacancies on the establishment, in accordance with the provisions of the very Royal Warrant, which the honourable Member would appear to think is open to such serious objection on the score of liberality.

Another vacancy will be created in the establishment of Queen's aides-de-camp before the close of the year, by the promotion of Colonel R. H. Gall, half-pay, late 14th Hussars, when Colonel Sir Baker Russell, K.C.M.G., C.B., 13th Hussars, now supernumerary, will, we understand, be placed on the unpaid establishment. That gallant officer is now on his way to India.

Some delay has been occasioned in publishing the thirteenth section of the German official account of the Franco-German war of 1870-71, owing to the employment of Major F. C. H. Clarke, Royal Artillery, on special service in Asia Minor, in connection with the delimitation of boundaries under the Treaty of Berlin. It is now two years since the last section made its appearance, but it was thought advisable to allow Major Clarke to complete the work upon which he has been now for four years engaged, and which he has carried out with so much ability. The thirteenth section is now in progress, and will shortly be published from the Intelligence Department.

It would only be an act of fairness to the many candidates who have just offered themselves for the entrance examination for the Staff College were the Authorities to make known their intentions with regard to the existing vacancies. At the present time the number of officers under instruction at Sandhurst is less than the proper establishment, and by rights the vacancies now existing should be filled from among the qualified candidates at the examinations just concluded.

As we announced some months ago was probable, Brevet Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., 19th Hussars, and Captain J. F. C. Hayward, 25th Regiment, have been appointed Aides-de-Camp to General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., at Aldershot.

The public may rest assured that the special pension, whatever it may have been, awarded to Mr. Clode was most thoroughly earned and well deserved. Whilst expressing a sincere wish that Mr. Clode may long live to enjoy it, we can but lament that the War Office and the country are deprived of the services of such a useful and conscientious official. The books he has published are a monument to Mr. Clode's research, knowledge, and energy. The work he has done is best known to those who are aware of the patience and knowledge he brought to the solution of many a difficult question in Pall Mall.

Captain A. H. Hope, 25th Regiment, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General W. Hope, C.B., commanding the troops in Scotland.

It appears strange that a regiment which has performed such excellent service as the 9th Lancers have lately done in Cabul should have been allowed to complain for so many months past of unfair treatment, in being deprived of the benefit of the promotion to which its subalterns naturally looked forward when Captain Abadie received his majority in December last. No steps have, however, yet been taken for filling the vacant troop. The hardships the regiment has undergone in Afghanistan have had the effect of incapacitating a number of its officers, and our advices from Cabul speak of the discontent which exists in consequence of the delay which has been occasioned in gazetting the promotions. Lord William Beresford being reappointed to the Indian Viceregal Staff, it would be in the highest sense unjust to allow him to interfere with the proper run of promotion, although his services may entitle him to some other reward, and we trust that the report may not prove to be true which attributes to the War Office a desire to restore him to the establishment, to the exclusion of a junior, who will thus be kept out of his troop for a further period, when officers are much needed to carry out regimental duties. Such an arrangement might effect a small saving of money, but it would certainly not be calculated to produce confidence in the fair-dealing of those vested with authority.

Her Majesty has confirmed the appointment of Colonel W. L. Pemberton, C.B., half-pay, late 60th Rifles, as Assistant-Quartermaster-General at headquarters, vice Colonel A. J. H. Elliot, C.B., whose period of Staff service has expired.

When we heard from Australia, Colonel Scratchley, C.M.G., R.E., was employed on a special mission to Tasmania, having been summoned there by the Local Government to give it the benefit of his advice as to the measures it is desirable to adopt for the better defence of the colony.

The command of the Exeter Brigade Depôt falls vacant on June 30, when Colonel F. E. Drewe completes his five years in the appointment. The Guildford and Taunton commands will also have to be filled immediately, the present incumbents, Colonels G. Dean Pitt, C.B., and G. N. Boldero, standing third and fourth on the list of colonels for promotion to major-general.

Only thirty regiments are now without paymasters, over one hundred appointments having been made to the new Department from the combatant ranks since the issue of the new system, which Colonel Stanley may take credit to himself for having inaugurated with unqualified success.

The following question will be asked in the "House" on an early day:—"Having in view the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments, and the Royal Warrants issued for the guidance of the same, upon what principles have the 'selections' for the retirement of certain officers, and the retention of others, been made?" We are not surprised to hear that Mr. Childers, to whom the question has been shown privately, should request that it be deferred for a few days, for, judging from the "selections" made, the retentions and retirements are about equally as inexplicable. If hard work, long experience, notable intelligence, and high encomiums constitute, in the eyes of those entrusted with the revision, a reason for retirement, it becomes a difficult matter to say upon what grounds the retentions have been made. Commissary Knapp and Deputy-Commissary Gordon are examples of those selected for retirement.

The Navy.

Achilles, Capt. A. C. Heneage, parted company with the rest of the Channel Squadron last Saturday when off Plymouth, and put into that port to give leave to her crew after the ship's lengthened absence from England. She is to make good a few defects and leave early next month to rendezvous at Portland. After a three months' cruise round the English coast with the combined Channel and Coastguard Squadrons, she will return to Plymouth early in October to dismantle and pay off into the 4th division of the Steam Reserve.

Agincourt, Capt. Alexander Buller, C.B., bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral C. L. Waddilove, second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, arrived at Portland on Saturday.

Alexandra, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, flagship of Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., in company with the Rupert, Invincible, and Thunderer, arrived at Naples last Saturday.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord C. Scott, left Spithead on Saturday for Holyhead, where she took part in the proceedings last Thursday, in honour of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. The Bacchante will return to Portsmouth, but may subsequently become temporarily attached to the Reserve Squadron in the course of a cruise which is in contemplation with Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales on board.

Belleisle, Capt. T. Barnardiston, was moved from Hamoaze into the Sound on Saturday morning. Her powder, &c., was shipped during the day, and she sailed on Monday for Holyhead, where she took part in the proceedings in honour of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales on Thursday.

Bittern, Com. E. B. Pusey, has been ordered to Malta, as soon as relieved.

Condor, Com. Day, has been instructed to detach herself from the flag, and to proceed to the Levant in search of the Greek pirates who have recently appeared on the coast of Asia Minor.

Coquette, Lieut.-Com. Festing, left Corfu on May 21 for a cruise up the Adriatic as far as Scutari, returning to Corfu on May 26.

Cygnet, Lieut.-Com. William Wilson, had arrived at Corfu from Poros on June 7, and has been detached in search of pirates on the coast of Asia Minor.

Defence, Capt. A. T. Thrupp, A.D.C., was commissioned on Tuesday, June 15, the crew of the Resistance being turned over to this ship.

Elk, Com. H. Clanchy, is ordered to Buenos Ayres with the remainder of the River Plate squadron.

Falcon, Com. B. F. Clark, has been ordered to cruise around Samos in search of Greek pirates.

Flamingo, Com. W. H. Hall, left St. John's, Newfoundland, on Saturday last for the West Coast fishery. When but ten miles out, while steaming slowly in a dense fog, she ran into an iceberg, seriously injuring her jibboom and bowsprit, and doing other damage to her bows, necessitating her return to St. John's for repairs.

Foam, Lieut. and Com. Julian A. Baker, was commissioned at Chatham on June 15, with a crew of 61 officers and men. Lieut. Julian Alleyne Baker attained the rank of sub-lieut. Dec. 24, 1867, and was promoted to lieut., June 24, 1868, after creditably passing the examination at the Royal Naval College. He afterwards accompanied Sir Samuel Baker to the Nile, and was highly spoken of in his despatch, which arrived in England in Aug. 1873. Lieut. Baker was placed on the Retired List June 24, 1873, shortly after which, as our readers may remember, we remarked:—"We trust that the application made to the Admiralty on behalf of Lieut. J. A. Baker, R.N., who has accompanied Sir Samuel throughout his recent expedition, will induce their Lordships to retain him on the Active List, for it is a positive gain to the Service to have amongst its officers men of this class, ready to do and dare, rather than remain at home on half-pay, quietly waiting until they may again be called upon to serve. Lieut. Baker's anxiety to remain in her Majesty's Service is undoubted, for Sir Samuel Baker, in a letter to Sir Henry Rawlinson, remarks that, 'After all he has gone through with me, it would break his heart should his reward be an order of retirement from the Navy.'" He was again placed on the Active List in the spring of 1874, and on March 2, 1875, was appointed to the Undaunted, fitting for the East Indies, where he served under Capts. Hugh Campbell, Harry W. Brent, and Nathaniel Bowden-Smith, under the flags of Vice-Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald, K.C.S.I., and Rear-Admiral John Corbett, C.B., until paid off at the close of 1878.

Forward, Lieut.-Com. Brickdale, has orders to rendezvous at Buenos Ayres.

Garnet, Capt. Loftus Jones, has ordered the ships under his command to assemble at Buenos Ayres, where disturbances are anticipated.

Growler, Com. Charles Willcox, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Saturday morning from the China station, viâ the Suez Canal, calling at Malta and Gibraltar. She was inspected on Monday, and has proceeded into harbour to prepare for paying off. Com. Wilcox reports that in crossing the Bay of Biscay upon the homeward voyage, her engines broke down; strong head winds prevailing, she was compelled to put back to Cape Finisterre for repair. Her boilers are thoroughly worn out and her machinery nearly so. She will pay off on the 13th prox. The Growler was recommissioned at Hong Kong on Feb. 18, 1877.

Hart, Com. R. Evans, was paid off on Tuesday, June 15, under the superintendence of Capt. Grant, of the Royal Adelaide. The crew have been granted the usual scale of leave, and the ship has been placed on the 4th division of the Reserve.

Hector, Capt. Richard Carter, steamed out of Portsmouth Harbour on Tuesday, and anchored at Spithead to take in powder and shell.

Helicon, Lieut.-Com. Sir Baldwin W. Walker, Bart., reports her boilers nearly worn out, and a new set are ordered to be constructed for her at Sheerness.

Iris, Capt. Edward H. Seymour, was again placed upon the mile in Stokes Bay on Saturday, and, as everything passed off with the greatest satisfaction, the trial may be regarded as final. The following are the results obtained, there being little wind and the sea quite smooth:—

On the conclusion of the trial, the Iris steamed into harbour, where her injured foremast will be replaced by a steel mast taken from the Mercury, and it is expected that she will leave for her station in the Mediterranean in about ten days. Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key and Admiral A. P. Ryder inspected the Iris last Tuesday. She is said to have behaved very badly as a sea-boat during her recent short cruise, and is reported as rolling more than is considered desirable. It is probable that an alteration will be made by which this defect will be remedied. Her foremast, which was sprung during the cruise, has been removed under the sheers at Portsmouth.

Northumberland, Capt. Henry R. Wratislaw, arrived at Portland on Saturday, in company with the rest of the Channel Squadron, from Berehaven.

Plover, Com. H. B. Stewart, is being dismantled alongside the boat-house jetty in Portsmouth Dockyard. She is to be paid off on the 2nd July.

Rapid, Capt. William F. S. Mann, arrived at Malta from Poros on June 3, to refit. She will be ready in about a fortnight, when she is ordered to proceed to the coast of Syria, to relieve the Bittern, ordered to Malta.

Resistance, Capt. A. T. Thrupp, A.D.C., was paid off at Devonport on Monday, when the crew was turned over to the Defence.

Swallow, Com. J. Borlase Warren, has been ordered to Buenos Ayres.

Temeraire, Capt. the Hon. W. Carpenter, parted company with the Squadron on Friday, June 4, and returned to Malta to take the supernumeraries brought out by the Himalaya, proceeding immediately to rejoin the Squadron on the coast of Italy.

Tenedos, Capt. E. S. Adeane, C.M.G., senior officer of the Barbadoes Division, was at Barbadoes on May 31.

Torch, Com. W. H. C. Selby, is making good defects at Malta, and is to be out of the dockyard hands about the 20th inst., when she will proceed to the Piræus, Cyprus, and the Levant.

Valiant, Capt. Chapman, was taken out of No. 3 dock at Keyham Yard on Monday, and made a trial of her machinery at moorings in Keyham Basin. The trial was not satisfactory, but was resumed on Thursday when better results were obtained.

Vestal, Com. Dashwood G. Tandy, arrived at Malta on June 5 from China, viâ the Suez Canal, and proceeded for Portsmouth on June 12.

Warrior, Capt. R. G. Douglas, steamed out of Portsmouth Harbour on Monday, and anchored at Spithead to take in powder and shell.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

Referring to the well-authenticated rumours afloat as to the nature of the recommendations made by the Committee having Sir A. Cooper Key, the Senior Sea Lord, at their head, the Times remarks that:—"The country would probably hear with regret that it had been seriously proposed to disband the Marine forces, and that the Committee had resolved to reorganise them by reforming them altogether. But though startling, this decision would not be unprecedented; and after all, the Committee must be guided entirely by practical considerations of utility, cost, and efficiency. The present Marine corps are comparatively modern organisations. The Royal Marine Artillery was not raised until 1804, while the Royal Marine Light Infantry divisions did not receive their name until the year 1855. In fact, the history of the Marine forces has been a record of constant fluctuations. The first corps that was specially constituted in 1664 for service at sea, and which was known as the Duke of York and Albany's Maritime Regiment, was soon afterwards, in 1689, amalgamated with the present Coldstream Guards. Of the six Marine regiments which were formed in 1702, three were disbanded in 1713, while the others, which are now known as the 30th Cambridgeshire, the 31st Huntingdonshire, and the 32nd Cornwall Light Infantry, have long ceased to have any connection with the sea. Besides these regiments of the Line, the 6th Warwickshire, 19th Princess of Wales's Own, 20th East Devonshire, 34th Cumberland, 35th Royal Sussex, and the 36th Herefordshire have all at one time formed part of the Marine establishment, and served as Marines for several years. Six regiments of Marines were raised in 1739, and four additional in 1740, and, after languishing until 1748, the whole of them were disbanded." After discussing the composition of the Royal Marine forces, the Times proceeds to point out that,—"As it is agreed that the services of the Marine forces cannot be dispensed with, and as artillerymen are clearly the most useful description of soldier in an ironclad navy, the question may be asked whether if, as the Committee first recommended, infantry were trained in gun-drill, it would suffice for the purposes in view? To this proposal several objections suggest themselves. The soldier is a firm believer in esprit de corps, and is jealous of his position; and if the Marine were called upon to do heavy gun-drill on board ship, without being paid and recognised as an artillerymen, he would consider himself in a sense degraded and become discontented. A corps of pseudo-artillery, again, officered by infantry officers of an inferior educational and practical standard as compared with the Marine Artillery, would not probably prove a very effective one, and the tone of the Force would be lowered. It is also to be apprehended that, as Purchase has been abolished in the Army, few men of any self-respect and intelligence would care to accept commissions in the Marines, seeing that the corps would inevitably sink in character and public estimation, and would be performing duties, at a low rate of pay, which the Government had refused to recognise at their full value. The only way out of the difficulty into which the Committee have drifted is for them to reverse their finding, and to boldly recommend the conversion of the whole of the Marine forces into an efficient and compact body of Naval Artillery. Such a measure as this has, we understand, met with the approval of all the senior and most prominent Admirals in the Fleet, as the one most calculated to provide the Navy with an effective body of reserve artillery, and to increase the confidence of the country in the efficiency of its first line of defence. . . . . . The Royal Marines are necessary on board ship; and such being the case, the country looks to the present Government to see that this fine body of men are made as effective as possible for the money which they cost. If the entire force can be readily converted into Naval Artillery, the efficiency of the Service demands that the officers who are best fitted by education, training, and experience to compass the change should be brought to the front."

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Cologne Gazette writes that although it is generally asserted that there is no fear of an outbreak of hostilities with China, for the negotiations with Marquis Tseng are certain to lead to an understanding, still every day brings fresh news of a concentration of Russian war-vessels in Chinese waters. Besides the Siberian flotilla, comprising the clipper Abreck and four gunboats, in all 29 guns, the clipper Dschigit, 7 guns, is already there. On the way thither are the ironclad frigates Minin, 28 guns, and Prince Posharskij, 20 guns, the clippers Rasboinik, 11 guns, and Najesdnik, 11 guns, and a cruiser of 11 guns. The clipper Kreuzer, 9 guns, also left Aden on April 24 for China. Shortly, moreover, a new fleet is to leave Cronstadt, composed of an ironclad battery, 3 cruisers, and several clippers, for the same destination.

Experiments took place on Monday at Portsmouth to determine the penetration of 64-lb. Palliser projectiles with gas checks. A 6½-ton gun was placed nine yards from two 6-inch iron plates and fired 10 rounds. In eight cases the projectiles (which are steel pointed), penetrated to the wooden backing, but in others they broke upon the surface of the target.

HOW TO MAKE THE NAVY UNPOPULAR.

SIR,—The Channel Fleet has now just left Berehaven, and come to England to give leave. But where do they go to for the purpose? Not to their own ports, but to Portland, from where the men will be put to great expense to get to their homes, to say nothing of all the time lost in travelling. In the case of the Plymouth ships, the men are actually taken past their ports, thus incurring greater expense both to the country and men. The Achilles has had many acts of insubordination on board. Is it to be wondered at? After she has been abroad for three years, the men imagine they are coming home at last for a long leave to see their friends, but find out it is only Bantry Bay after all. It is incredible, the utter want of consideration shown to the Navy, both by the Admiralty and the senior officers afloat. Just the same happened in the case of the Agincourt. We read in the speeches of the First Lord of the exceptional conduct of the men up the Dardanelles, not a single case of insubordination, &c., during the two years they were up there. How are they rewarded when they come home? With three days' leave, and then sent to cruise with the Reserve Squadron. One would think Blue-jackets and Marines were a lot of cattle, without any feelings at all, instead of men who are always ready to work day and night, and cheerfully too, and do what their country requires of them. All the acts of insubordination now occurring in the Achilles must be laid at the door of the Admiralty. The men are utterly callous, and don't care what happens to them; and this is a ship which, in the smartness of the men and the drills, is second to none in the Fleet. It is also scandalous the treatment men get in the matter of boats. Although the ship is hung round with them, the men almost invariably have to pay their own way on shore. What must the sailor think when he is treated thus by not only officials, but also by his own officers? The fact is, it is utter want of consideration from beginning to end.—I am, &c.,

CHILI AND PERU.

Callao was again bombarded by the Chilian squadron on the 9th inst., the loss of the Peruvians being stated at 40 men killed and wounded. The Chilian accounts state that their ships fired 412 shots without experiencing any casualties, although the Huascar, having approached to within 2,000 yards of the port, was struck three times by shot fired from the Peruvian batteries. No other Chilian vessel was hit, but the Peruvian ships Union and Aroya are reported to have been much damaged by the fire from the Chilian squadron, which also sank two barges and exploded two torpedoes the Peruvians were preparing. Both Tacna and Arica have been captured by the Chilian army, between which and Lima the allies are stated to possess six Krupp guns and 20 other cannon, mounted on heights behind a deep ravine which the enemy would have to cross. They have also a sufficient store of provisions and an abundant supply of water, and a force of 6,000 Peruvians, with artillery, has arrived at Arequipa from Lima, to assist in an endeavour to repel the advance of the so far victorious Chilian army.

THE SAILORS' CLUB, BERMUDA.

SIR,—In your article on the Bermuda Sailors' and Marines' Club, which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette of May 8, you give me the credit of "reviving" Admiral Sir James Hope's original idea of 1866, to establish such an institution in Bermuda. Will you kindly correct this statement, as the credit is due to my predecessors, Rear-Admiral Somerset and Admiral Sir Cooper Key, who in 1877 started the work which has since been carried on successfully?—I am, &c.,

REVIEW AT ALDERSHOT.

A review was held at Aldershot on Tuesday, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the King of the Hellenes, and the Duke of Cambridge. Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B., had command of the defending force, consisting of the 11th Hussars and a battery of Royal Horse Artillery, two field batteries Royal Artillery, the 2nd Infantry Brigade, including the 75th, 95th, and 96th Regiments, and one field company Royal Engineers. This force represented the rearguard of an enemy falling back from Guildford on York Town, and was supposed to have received orders to cover the retreat of its main body across the Basingstoke Canal at Frimley. The remainder of the division included two batteries Horse Artillery, the 5th and 7th Dragoon Guards, five batteries Field Artillery, the 1st and 3rd Infantry Brigades, including the 2nd Batns. 18th and 19th Regts., and 45th and 109th Regts., under the command of Major-Gen. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., and a Brigade, composed of the 52nd Light Infantry, 82nd Regt., and the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, under Major-Gen. Peyton. Three of the batteries, with the 1st Infantry Brigade, under Major-Gen. Spurgin, marched from the camp at an early hour, and proceeded to the north-west side of Normandy Common, where they arrived about 10.15 a.m. One field battery of the Artillery and the Infantry Brigade under Major-Gen. Peyton stood on the road leading from Crown Ravine Clump to Stanford Common. On the arrival of the Royal visitors on the ground, about 10.30 a.m., the field operations were commenced by a sharp engagement of the cavalry and a heavy fire of the artillery. The force under Sir Thomas Steele advanced about 11.30 a.m., and vigorously attacked Gen. Cameron. A sharp engagement between the cavalry on both sides lasted for about an hour. The operations were brought to a conclusion about one o'clock. The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Royal Princes, the King of the Hellenes, and other visitors, witnessed the march-past of the troops under Foxhills at the conclusion, and returned to London by a special train in the course of the afternoon. The Prince of Wales took occasion, at a public dinner the same evening, in returning thanks for "the Army," to refer in terms of praise to the appearance of the troops, and especially noted the appearance of the three Militia regiments which formed part of the force; but his Royal Highness's remarks do not appear to have been fully reported. The division turned out relatively stronger than it was when the Queen was at Aldershot. General regret is expressed at the departure of Sir T. Steele, whose tenure of command has been marked by no very exciting event, but who has done his best to make the division efficient, and has been as hospitable as a bishop, whilst he has not neglected the martial virtues. Although the gallant officer has never seen a shot fired in anger since he kept Lord Raglan's papers in beautiful order, as Mr. Kinglake testified long ago, when he wrote his preface to the unfinished history of the war of 1854, he had kept pace with modern ideas and tactics, and will hand over a very fairly efficient little division to Sir D. Lysons, who will very probably make it hot for them with a few field-days in July, ere he settles down to his perfunctory work. Major-Gen. FitzWygram has done wonders with his cavalry, and all agree in praise of the arm at Aldershot.

SIR,—The Royal Marines are indebted to you for the article in your issue of June 5 calling attention to the unsatisfactory state of suspense under which the whole corps is labouring. The question as to whether the Marines are to remain an integral portion of the fighting strength of the Navy appears to have been settled for the present, according to the statement made by the Secretary of the Admiralty to the House of Commons in Committee of Supply on Monday last. But the future position of the corps is still under consideration, and both Artillery and Infantry are anxious that that position should be clearly defined. It seems to be taken for granted that both branches of the corps are to be amalgamated, the only question being as to whether the reorganised corps should be Artillery or Infantry. The Committee which has recently been sitting were ordered by the last Admiralty to report as to the best method of abolishing the Royal Marine Artillery, and they accordingly recommended that that corps should be allowed to die out, but feeling convinced that Artillery would be more useful on board ship, they unanimously recorded their opinion to that effect. It would have been well if the late Admiralty, before deciding on abolishing the Royal Marine Artillery, had caused enquiry to be made as to the possibility of raising the standard of training of the Marine Infantry by turning them into Artillery, without imposing additional expense on the country, a measure which, in the opinion of many of the oldest and most experienced officers of the Navy, is quite practicable. This question, although so important, does not appear to have been proposed to the Committee by the late Admiralty. The present Admiralty have not committed themselves to any scheme, and they have now the opportunity of doing what is wanted both from a point of economy and efficiency.—I am, &c.,

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. ZULU CAMPAIGN PROMOTIONS.

"G. H." writes:—"In your last number, 'Commissariat' wishes to set the public knowledge right respecting some errors in contemporary papers of last month, and so adopts the course of waiting a month, and then writing to you—a very logical mode of procedure. The statements in question were published as observations from a Cape correspondent, and when written, it is evident that they were perfectly correct, for the notification of the promotion of the three Ordnance Store officers promulgated in the Gazette of March 12 had not then reached Natal; and I question if the steps would have been given at all, but for your constantly hammering away at the subject, or else why tarried the wheels of the chariot so long? Now for facts. The promotions and rewards in the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments are as follows:—

COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.—Promotions and honours—Comy.-Gens. Watt (C.B.) and Strickland (Nov. 23, 1878, and K.C.B.); Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Morris (C.B.); Comy. Webb (C.B.); Assist.-Comy.-Gens. Hughes (Nov. 29, 1879, and C.M.G.) and Walton (Nov. 29, 1879); Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gens. Dunne (Jan. 23, 1879) and Richardson (Nov. 29, 1879).

ORDNANCE STORE DEPARTMENT.—Promotions and honours—Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Wright (Jan. 6, 1879, and C.B.); Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gens. Campbell and Stevens (both Nov. 29, 1879).

I do not think any comment is necessary. Promotions—One C.G., two A.C.G.'s, and two D.A.C.G.'s; against one D.C.G. and two D.A.C.G.'s Honours—One K.C.B., three C.B.'s, and one C.M.G., against one C.B. With regard to the observation that the officers at Woolwich were the most deserving of reward, why not carry that principle a step further back, and say that the greatest credit was due to the War Office for directing Woolwich? The argument here used may be termed the 'reductio ad absurdum.' One word about the Control. It has been abolished. Without claiming to be a prophet, I feel assured it will be revived within the next five years. But I see not what the Control has to do with the question of rewards. With reference to the fact that one service is under the Horse Guards and the other the War Office, I cannot understand any claim on the part of the former to pre-eminence, considering that the Horse Guards is administered by the War Office. Further, I fail to see the point aimed at, more especially as at the time these rewards were given both Departments were administered by the Surveyor-General of Ordnance. 'Commissariat' should remember that in 1858 the redundant Ordnance officers were transferred to the Commissariat, and a similar proceeding took place last month. The latter is much to the regret of the present Ordnance officers, while it is doubtless equally pleasing to the Commissariat to find that the late transfers are superior to many, and surpassed by none of their own officers. I have not the slightest desire to make any invidious comparisons. It does no good; on the contrary, it engenders a bitter feeling."

Mr. Henry Slade, fleet surgeon, whose name was omitted from the list of officers retired last quarter in the Navy List, entered the Service in 1847, and after seeing much service over all the West Coast of Africa during the height of the slave trade, including the charge of a fever-stricken American whaler, with which he cruised in the south-east trade wind until the crew were convalescent, returned to Haslar Hospital in 1851, whence he was appointed to the Winchester, Capt. Granville G. Lock, C.B., fitting out as flagship for the East Indies, and in her proceeded to Rangoon to take part in the Burmese war, and was present as senior medical officer of the boat flotilla, in the Irrawaddy at every subsequent action of importance, including the severe fight near Donabew, when Capt. Lock was mortally wounded. Being promoted for his services, Mr. Slade was appointed to the Hermes, in which he served in attacks on piratical junks in the China sea and at the slaughter amongst the Chinese at Amoy during the Tae-ping rebellion, where he took charge of some hundreds of wounded Chinamen. Serving next in the Harrier, Mr. Slade was in the Baltic during the Russian war, being engaged in operations in the Gulf of Bothnia in the season of 1855, returning to the Baltic so early in 1856 as to be frozen in, and remaining until peace was concluded. Continuing to serve in the Harrier, on the S.E. coast of America, for two years, Mr. Slade was in 1860 appointed to the Miranda, for the Australian station, arriving in New Zealand at the conclusion of the Taranaki war. Engaged in the Maori war of 1863-4, he was present as senior medical officer with the Naval Brigade at the combined Military and Naval attack on the Gate Pah at Tauranga, where among our severe losses were Capt. J. F. C. Hamilton, of the Esk, killed, and Com. Edward Hay, of the Harrier, mortally wounded, making three captains in command of ships killed in engagements on shore when Mr. Slade was present in medical charge. Mr. Slade has served in the Channel Squadron, Flying Squadron, and home station, and has received the Burmese (with Pegu clasp), Baltic, and New Zealand medals, and was twice promoted for special service. While on half-pay, Mr. Slade in 1859 saw some of the wounded in Northern Italy upon the battles of Solferino and Magenta, and in 1866, during the Austro-Prussian war, visited the hospitals of the Prussian Army in the field, immediately after the battle of Sadowa, and passing to the Austrian side in Bohemia visited their hospitals in Moravia and Vienna. In 1870, at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, Mr. Slade was visiting the hospitals of the French Army at Metz and Nancy, when the Prussians arrived and occupied the latter city, the head-quarter staff of the Crown Prince furnishing him with a safe-conduct, to continue through France and Germany, where he visited their wounded. In the winter of 1877-78, during the Turco-Russian war, Mr. Slade witnessed a great deal of the transport of the wounded and suffering population, and the management of the hospitals between the Balkans and Constantinople.

At Her Majesty's, "La Traviata" was given on Monday night, Signor Campanini making his first appearance this season, as Alfredo, and Mdlle. Lilla Lehmann repeating her impersonation of Violetta. "Mignon" was played on Tuesday evening, with Madame Nillson as the heroine; and "Faust" and "Don Giovanni" have been repeated during the week. On Saturday (this evening) will be revived Verdi's "La Forza del Destino," with a revision of the original text and some alterations of the score by the composer. The attendance hitherto at both the Italian operas has been quite equal to the average of preceding seasons.

A morning performance at the Olympic Theatre has favourably introduced to the London Stage Miss Edmiston, a young actress of provincial repute. As Beatrice in Shakespeare's comedy of "Much Ado About Nothing," her chief effects were gained in the more sprightly speeches of the part, but her well-sustained rendering of the character generally augured favourably of her future dramatic career. In a new comedietta, by Mr. E. Rose, entitled "Mad," two twin-sisters, Miss Amy and Miss Louise Lionel, turned to excellent account a remarkable personal resemblance, which is admirably made the theme of a lively little piece, turning on the familiar pivot of mistaken identity. Both the youthful actresses exhibit natural aptitude for the stage, combined with manifest intelligence and vivacity, and a cordial reception was the result. The author of the piece played an ardent genealogist with much quiet humour, and Mr. W. H. Vernon, who had previously acted Benedick in the comedy with considerable spirit and intelligence, very vivaciously impersonated the hero of the comedietta.

A grand military tournament, under distinguished patronage, will be given next week at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, the profits being in aid of the funds of that excellent institution, the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows. All officers and friends of the Army in London should make a point of attending during the week, if only in support of one of the most deserving of our military charities, which stands much in need of funds.

At the Polytechnic Institution, a second series of Shakespearian Recitals has been given, with optical effects, Mr. Marlande Clarke, a competent elocutionist, rendering selections from "Hamlet," and Miss O'Shea gracefully portraying Ophelia. Mr. J. L. King also delivers a lecture on "Phosphorescence and Cold Light," and Mr. Malden illustrates with dioramic views the picturesque scenery of the Highlands.

An attractive programme has been issued by Miss Mary Chatterton, daughter of Mr. F. B. Chatterton, late lessee of Drury Lane, who announces a harp recital at Langham Hall, Great Portland Street, on Wednesday next, June 23. Miss Chatterton will be supported by Madame Marie Roze and Mdlle. Tremelli, of her Majesty's Theatre. The famous ballad vocalist, Miss Poole, and other well-known vocal and instrumental executants, will also give their assistance. Signor Tito Mattei presides at the pianoforte, and the conductors are Signor Bisacchia and Mr. Henry Löhr.

Mrs. Kendal has returned to the St. James's Theatre, where "The Ladies' Battle" is now revived; and Mr. Kendal appears as Sir Hugh de Brass, in the old farce of "A Regular Fix."

"Les Cloches de Corneville" will be removed from the Globe to the Olympic in the course of a fortnight, and "The Danites" will then be transferred from the New Sadler's Wells to the Globe. Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne take their annual benefit next Wednesday at the Vaudeville, when a new farcical comedy, from the German, called "The Guv'nor," will be produced.

Fourteen Months in Canton. By Mrs. Gray. (Macmillan and Co.)—The authoress of this little volume may claim the credit of having brought before her readers in simple but expressive language her experiences of a tour from London to Canton, of her residence there for fourteen months, and her return to England. During Mrs. Gray's sojourn in Canton, she enjoyed many opportunities of seeing the inner life of the Chinese, and of learning much of them in their own homes. We must refer such of our readers as wish to become more intimately acquainted with life in China to the volume itself, being content with giving a rapid sketch of the voyage out. On Jan. 18, 1877, the Abyssinia sailed from Liverpool, arriving in New York in fourteen days. Of course Niagara was conscientiously "done," and then came the start for Chicago. A few short days sufficed to afford evidence of the indefatigable industry of the people in having raised such a noble town so quickly after the destruction of the greater part of the old city. Chicago was interesting, but the Salt Lake City and the Mormon Settlement looming in the distance proved still more attractive; and in a brief time, Mrs. Gray and her party were enjoying the lovely Salt Lake City, and, it maybe, becoming initiated in the Mormon mysteries. Although it was a paradise in some respects, in others it was decidedly commercial; "Bon Marche" stared the visitor at each turning, occasionally relieved by the bold words, "not to be rivalled." The run across the continent of America rather disappointed the authoress, malgrè, the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevadas. On reaching San Francisco, better known as "Frisky," a sad disappointment occurred. The Yosemite Valley was an impossibility owing to the tiresome snow. From San Francisco to Kong Kong proved a terrible voyage, occupying four weeks before Japan was reached. Then came Yokohama, and finally Canton. Mrs. Gray has written a charming little book of travel, and we heartily recommend its perusal.

The Danish man-of-war Sjoelland, from the West Indies, having Prince Waldemar of Denmark on board, arrived at Spithead on Wednesday evening.

There is no malady more general than tooth ache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouthwash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath, will be entirely relieved, and never suffer again, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow, Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

The following may be specially mentioned:—Fish, Meat, Game, Poultry, Fruit, Flowers, Vegetables, Ice, General Dairy Produce, Forage, &c.

The expediency of this undertaking has been forcibly brought by many Shareholders to the notice of the Directors of the Army and Navy Co-operative Society, and they have in consequence consented to form its Board of Direction, and have subscribed the Memorandum of Association for 1,400 Shares.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT.—DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE.—These complaints are the results of a disordered liver, which secretes bile in quality or quantity incapable of digesting food. Digestion requires a free flow of healthy bile, to insure which Holloway's Pills and Ointment have long been famous, far eclipsing every other medicine. Unsuitable food, irregularity of living, unhealthy climates, and other causes are constantly throwing the liver into disorder, but that important organ can, under all circumstances, soon be regulated and healthily adjusted by Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which are directed upon its vital secretion. The Ointment rubbed on the skin penetrates immediately to the liver, whose blood and nerves it rectifies. One trial is all that is needed; a cure will soon follow.

DIVISION OF PROFITS, 1880.—The Tenth Division of Profits will be made amongst Policies in existence at November 15, 1880, and all persons assuring before that date will be entitled to share in the distribution.

TO CAPITALISTS.—A FIRM of over 150 years' standing have just arranged the PURCHASE of a splendid LONDON PROPERTY, which, judiciously worked, will treble their profits, To find the increased capital, they intend to form themselves into a Limited Company, but they wish to avoid having the Company promoted in the ordinary way, and for this end would be glad to find a few Gentlemen with capital, who would join them, after the strictest investigation, in forming a Company on the same principle as other eminent firms have recently done, without, in the first instance, offering shares to the public. The investment is of the most bonâ fide character will pay from the first a very high per-centage, and the shares must eventually reach a high premium.—Address to "X," 39 Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

NEW ZEALAND.—To Farmers, Gentlemen's Sons, with capital, Guardians, &c.—A block of land has been set apart within the 'MANCHESTER SPECIAL SETTLEMENT," 75 miles north of Wellington, for the SETTLEMENT of a number of YOUNG GENTLEMEN with CAPITAL of from £2,000 to £10,000 each on favourable terms. Good opportunities will be given for the purchase of land, and facilities for gaining Colonial experience.—For further particulars, apply to the SECRETARY, Emigrant and Colonists Aid Corporation, Limited—Chairman, His Grace the Duke of Manchester—25 Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster, S.W.

H. ST. GEORGE WILKINSON & CO.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are almost a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.

Professor WOLFFRAM, of the MANOR HOUSE, Lee, S.E., begs to inform his Old Pupils, their relatives, and friends that—to meet the requirements of Militia Officers under the new Regulations—he is about to organise SPECIAL CLASSES for the Spring and Autumn Examinations, both Literary and Military, entirely distinct from his Sandhurst and Woolwich Departments. The first Special Class for the October Literary Examination will open on the first week in August next.

The Special Class for the FINAL Military Competitive Examination (in accordance with the new scheme published by the Military Authorities and coming in operation in 1881) will open in January, 1881, under the superintendence of a retired Artillery officer. The course of studies in this Special Class will embrace the following subjects:—Military Tactics, Military Law, Fortification, Military Topography.

SEPTENNIAL REPORT

QUADRENNIAL REPORT.

During the last four years (1876-77-78-79), EIGHTY-ONE Pupils passed into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and TWO into the Royal Marine Light Infantry, out of one hundred and two sent up by him for Examination; of the remaining NINETEEN, SIXTEEN passed for commission through the Militia.

TWENTY-SEVEN Candidates from Militia Regiments passed for Commissions in the Line, out of THIRTY-ONE sent up for Examination, thus making in all a total of ONE HUNDRED and TWENTY-SIX Gentlemen, who have passed into her Majesty's Service from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment during the last four years.

MILITARY EDUCATION, HANOVER, GERMANY.—Prof. C. RUEHLE, for several years German and French Master at the Military School, Woolwich, whose Pupils have taken high places at the Woolwich and Sandhurst Examinations, assisted by an able staff of Masters, prepares Gentlemen for the Military Competitive Examinations. Militia Officers have an opportunity of beginning their course of preparation immediately after their training, and continuing the same without interruption to the date of the Examination.—Apply for terms, direct to Professor C. RUEHLE, Brühl Strasse 9C, Hanover, Germany; for reference, to Professor WOLFFRAM, Manor House, Lee, S.E.

NAVAL CADETS, ASSISTANT CLERKS

Principal—Mr T. H. VICKERY.

In addition to the general course of study pursued at this long-established School, Pupils are specially prepared for the examination required for the above.

At the Competitive Examinations in 1878 and 1879 for Assistant-Clerkships in the Royal Navy, SIXTEEN Pupils were successful in the competition. At the recent Examination in November. Pupils took the First and Third places.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing, this year or next, for Line Commissions can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major R. V. DICKENS (late 11th Foot), who, besides having passed the Staff College, and held several Staff appointments, has for some time past been successfully engaged in coaching Lieutenants of Militia, and also Sandhurst Cadets for their final examination in the same subjects. Other competent Tutors assist in preparing for the qualifying Examinations.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. GRIFFITHS, late Royal Artillery, for many years Instructor at Sandhurst, afterwards Garrison Instructor at Devonport, Editor of the eleventh edition of "The Artillerists' Manual and British Soldier's Compendium," wishes his former Pupils and Friends to know that he has joined the Establishment of the Rev. G. FAITHFULL, for instruction of his Militia Officers (of whom there are generally thirty at Storrington), in Fortification, Military Topography, Military Law, and Tactics, so as to enable them to compete successfully for Army Commissions under the recent Regulations. After this year no Commissions can be obtained except by successful competition in these subjects, which require at least one year's study, so that officers intending to compete in 1881 should at once apply to Lieutenant-Colonel L. GRIFFITHS, Storrington, Sussex, for admission to these classes for instruction.

The MANOR HOUSE, Lee, S.E.—At the last Preliminary Examination for Cadetships at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, held on April 7 and 8, 1880, EIGHTEEN Candidates passed from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment.

At the Preliminary Examination immediately preceding that, held on February 25 and 26, 1880, FIVE out of SIX Candidates sent up by him were successful.

At the last Literary Examination for Militia Officers, held on April 8 and the days following, ALL THE THREE CANDIDATES sent up from his Establishment were successful.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

A CERTAIN amount of licence is permitted to the artist in the treatment of his subject, and the writer of fiction has a wide scope for the stretch of his imagination, but a commentator on things that be, steps out of his way if he represents facts in such a manner that those not well-informed in the subject on which he writes must, by following his argument, necessarily be misled in their judgment. A recent article in a leading daily contemporary, on the relative value of the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry, in order to bring force to bear in favour of the Artillery branch of the corps, makes such statements as would at once warp the opinion of the uninformed reader. In the first instance, it says, "the present Marine Corps are a comparatively modern organisation. The Royal Marine Artillery was not raised until 1804, while the Royal Marine Light Infantry divisions did not receive their name until 1855." This is merely a play upon the words "Light Infantry," which title was added to the corps at the date mentioned; and, by the same line of argument, it might be said that the Royal Marines only had existence from the date they became "Royal," in 1802, whereas as a body the Marine corps is admitted to have been constituted in 1664, since which date it has only fluctuated in strength; but not so the Royal Marine Artillery, for up to 1862 they were only Artillery companies of the Royal Marines, the officers reverting to the red corps on promotion, if there was no vacancy in the blue; and as a fact, they only became a distinct body on the separation which took place in 1862. After expatiating at some length on the special course of instruction gone through by the officers of the Artillery branch, the writer of the article observes:—"It will thus be seen that the Marine Artillery officers are exceptionally educated, and as the corps to which they belong are not only able to fight the guns and field-pieces on board the fleet, but can do all deck work, and act as perfectly trained Infantry soldiers when landed, it would be fatal to the fighting strength of the country either to disband them or assimilate them with the Marines;" and adds that the question may be asked whether if, as the Committee first recommended, Infantry were trained in gun-drill, it would suffice for the purpose in view. The natural inference to be drawn from these observations is, that the Light Infantry Marine is useless on board the fleet so far as his knowledge of gun-drill is concerned, and that the Marine Artillery gunner only could be utilised in this respect, but such an argument should be at once refuted. That there is a difference in extent of instruction will not be denied, but to endeavour to create an impression that the red Marine knows nothing of ship gun-drill is unfair to that branch of the Service. The amount of instruction imparted to officers and men of the Light Infantry in the gun-drill battery attached to each head-quarters, comprises the working of both broadside and pivot guns, and every officer is capable of drilling a broadside, and every non-commissioned officer is capable of taking command of a gun, and every Light Infantry man of performing the duties of any number that may be assigned to him at a gun. We would ask in what way is the superior knowledge of the Marine Artillery officer utilised different from that of an officer of the Light Infantry in a man-of-war? Is the officer given charge of a battery, or called upon to do the duties of the gunnery lieutenant; or is he simply to report that his men are present at their quarters, and leave the rest to the gunnery officer of the ship? In nine cases out of ten, the latter is the case. Again, with regard to Artillery duties being performed by the corps without adequate payment, the article goes on to say, "It is also to be apprehended that as Purchase has been abolished in the Army, few men of any self-respect and intelligence would care to accept commissions in the Marines, seeing the corps would inevitably sink in character and public estimation." Such language as this is a gratuitous insult to the Light Infantry, as it suggests that if the élite of the corps, videlicet the Artillery branch, should be abolished, the mother corps which remains must necessarily sink, having no higher educated branch to uphold its prestige. The Light Infantry are not in any way dependent upon the Artillery for the status they hold, and it is better that each should fight its own battle, without attempting to depreciate the value of the other. Any reorganisation of the corps resulting in the destruction of the Artillery cannot but be deplored; and there can be no question, if the cost can be met, but that the wiser course will be to convert the Light Infantry soldier into a gunner, and then make more practical use of his knowledge than has hitherto been done by the Navy.

The speeches which have been made by Sir Garnet Wolseley at two public dinners since his return from South Africa have naturally attracted much attention. One short week will not elapse before the new Quartermaster-General will be in office in Pall Mall, and he will find so much to do there, perhaps, that he will have no more time for speech-making at public banquets. It would not be considered very decorous by Sir G. Wolseley if an officer serving under him were to speak of him in a public assembly as an obstinate obstructive, or had, not obscurely, hinted that he regarded his chief as a boulder, to be removed at the first opportunity; but whatever the Service may think of the allusions at the Press Fund Dinner, there can be but one opinion of the remarkable conversion effected in the mind of the new Quartermaster-General with respect to the uses of the Press. In "The Soldier's Pocket-book," written by Sir Garnet Wolseley, the language in which Special Correspondents are dealt with is in extraordinary contrast with that which was used on last Saturday night by the distinguished author. The Correspondent and his works were written of in terms of contempt and dislike. The frank expression of purely professional feeling on the part of the impetuous young Staff Colonel has now given place to elaborate eulogies by a diplomatic observer of forces, and a keen judge of moral influences. Writing in 1871 of the means of concealing and gaining intelligence, the author of the "Soldier's Pocket-Book" said:

> "Without saying so directly, you can lead your army to believe anything; and, as a rule, in all civilised nations, what is believed by the army, will very soon be credited by the enemy, having reached him by means of spies, or through the medium of those newly-invented curses to armies—I mean newspaper correspondents."

That is remarkably outspoken, at all events. The opinion was expressed seventeen or eighteen years after Sir Garnet Wolseley had "served in the first campaign in which a special correspondent was ever known;" but he little thought when he wrote it that he would ever, some nine years later, speak of the "newly-invented curse" in terms which must have filled those of the class who heard him, and knew his former opinions, with wonder, if not with thankfulness. It was not a solitary expression. In another passage of the same excellent work he wrote:—

> "Taking it for granted that the base of our army is a seaport, the town should be under the closest police surveillance. It must have a provost officer, with a sufficient police staff to keep order. He should take his orders from the officer in immediate command as to the individuals to whom passports should be granted to enable them to visit the army in the field. All foreigners must come with regular passports from their own ministers. Travelling gentlemen, newspaper correspondents, and all that race of drones, are an incumbrance to an army; they eat the rations of fighting men, and do no work at all."

We shall presently see what work the drones and curses are now expected to do. The gallant officer who addressed them in such terms of praise last Saturday, as his most valuable allies for the great campaign which is to be opened in Pall Mall, was full of grief in 1871 for the sorrow of the poor Generals who had to put up with the evil ones:—

> "An English General of the present day," he wrote, "is in the most unfortunate position in this respect, being surrounded by newspaper correspondents, who, pandering to the public craze for 'news,' render concealment most difficult."

There was an English General in 1880, surrounded by newspaper correspondents, who did not, we should think, esteem himself at all unfortunate in the circumstance. Stephano with a bottle in his hand, and singing after dinner, is very different from Stephano before he has banqueted. The Caliban has become "a most delicate monster! Four legs, and two voices. His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend. His backward voice is to utter speeches and to detract." Long may Sir Garnet hold his new faith, nor ever, like Stephano, exclaim, "This is a devil, and no monster!" But, seriously, we believe the later opinion is the result of matured experience, and accept it as such. Sir Garnet Wolseley said:—

> "Now, I had the privilege of serving in the first campaign where a special correspondent was known, so that I may be said to have been present at the birth of the system, and I have since, during many campaigns, been associated with special correspondents, so that I am entitled to express an opinion with regard to them, and I can honestly say that I believe no men have ever done their duty with greater honesty and greater zeal than the special correspondents. To you, gentlemen of the Press, I may tell you candidly that we in the Army look for many things. We feel deeply indebted to you for many a kind word, reaching us often at moments of difficulty, danger, and trial, which are deeply appreciated at such times as evidence of public sympathy, and which act, moreover, as spurs to our future movements and incentives to our further endeavours. To the Press generally the British Army now looks with the greatest anxiety and the greatest interest, for the rising men of the Army feel that it is only the power of the Press which can bring useful light to bear upon the dark parts of our military system, which they believe not to be in unison with the spirit of the age or with modern military science. You alone have sufficient power to enable us to correct and reform what we believe to be wrong, and to remove from the path of progress those great boulders of prejudice and superstition which now impede the way. You alone can enable us to put new wheels to the military coach, which by its creaking tells us of its present dangerous condition, and which is only with difficulty maintained in an upright position at all."

This is a very remarkable statement indeed. If her Majesty's old-established mail at Pall Mall be meant, we fear the coach may be overset altogether over some of the boulders, instead of being worked with more advantage; but Sir Garnet Wolseley, who has paid such a very handsome tribute to the services of the Press in the past, and who sang so pretty a palinode for the Special Correspondents, may be quite sure that he will have the support of all who desire sound reform and dread reckless innovation, and who hope that with the responsibilities of office won by great merit and valuable public services, will come also a fuller appreciation of the opinions of men who have made equally the welfare of the Army the study of their lives, the object of all their thoughts. It is all the more creditable that the change of opinion which has been so boldly announced should have been made known at a time when the impulses to candid avowal might have been checked by controversial difficulties, and when an erroneous idea that a lamentation over recent changes and their effects was an attack on a brilliant individuality, and an assault on a professional reputation might have been reasonably expected to silence the ingenuous voice of truth. As in the past, so it may be in the future. Sir Garnet Wolseley, when he mounts the old coach, may find it is in better order than he thought; that the old boulders are regular bricks, and that he can travel along, as we hope he will, in peace and honour to the end of his journey, to the great benefit of his health, and to the good of the Army and the country.

Under the title of "Premature Enlistment," Sir E. Sullivan has just written a pamphlet, which we hope every one who has the smallest interest in the state of the Army will read with the attention it deserves. We only regret that we cannot reprint every word of it. Many of the arguments are familiar to the readers of this journal, but Sir E. Sullivan puts his case with a force and clearness which we admire if we cannot imitate. Short service is, according to him, not the cause of the immature condition of our rank and file, but it has very considerably aggravated it. Sir E. Sullivan puts the matter in a nutshell:—

> "Short service does not necessarily mean an immature rank and file, neither does long service necessarily mean a mature one; but short service and premature enlistment combined make a matured rank and file an impossibility. Short service and mature enlistment can give a perfectly efficient rank and file; and long service and premature enlistment will give a certain number of matured men in the ranks; but premature enlistment combined with short service can only give an army of boys! An army that is recruited for three years' service with men over twenty years of age must always have its ranks filled with matured men. An army that is recruited for six years with boys of sixteen or seventeen years of age must always have its ranks half filled with boys. When short service gives a rank and file of men over twenty years of age, it is a most desirable institution. When, on the other hand, it gives a rank and file of boys between sixteen and twenty, it is simply madness."

Surely that is common-sense? But it seems as if it does not go down with the people who have reduced our Army to the state which made it a positive agony to the Horse Guards to send out the Zulu expeditionary column. There are one or two inaccuracies in the pamphlet,—such as the statement that 50 per cent. are under 20, and the other 50 per cent. under 23 years of age in the British Army,—which will be laid hold of to show that the arguments of Sir E. Sullivan are futile, but his deductions are only too true. The theorists who have worked so much evil are men who have little or no experience as regimental officers, and who scarcely know what "Infantry" means in relation to the internal economy of battalions. On the question of "Reserves," the writer remarks:—

> "The success of a campaign, of a war, depends often on the success of the first blow struck. Our 'first line' is the weapon we trust to, to strike this blow. We should, therefore, be sure it is sound and serviceable. If it breaks in our hand it may cause us irreparable disaster. We know that the weapon that is now in our hand is not reliable, and before disaster becomes imminent we should try and make it so. The serviceable and reliable condition of the rank and file of our regiments is what concerns the nation first of all. No doubt, a reserve is necessary also; but we cannot stir hand or foot; we cannot say 'Bo!' to any military goose, unless we have an efficient first line. With the evidence of the Zulu war before us, it is nothing short of madness for us, ad sirenos scopulos consenescere, to remain at anchor any longer within hearing of the siren's music, that tells us that our Army is in a satisfactory state, and fit to enter the European lists. All the world knows it is not; the condition of our rank and file is no secret, and it is far better for us to face the truth than to pretend to ignore it."

We shall not say a word of the story which comes to us from Afghanistan, but those who are responsible for the honour of the Army and the safety of the Empire know it. Let them beware how they neglect the warning. We shall return to this subject next week.

In estimating the relative efficiency of two guns which develop equal energies per inch of shot's circumference, but of unequal weight, it is only reasonable to select that gun which, with the lesser weight, develops the most energy per ton of gun. This is the only true standard when the guns under trial differ materially in calibre, weight of gun, projectile, and charge of powder; and applying it to measure the power of Woolwich, Armstrong, and Krupp guns, we find that Herr Krupp has so far beaten the English guns. At the late Meppen experiments, the Krupp 24-centimètre (9·5-inch) gun, throwing a projectile weighing 350 pounds, with an initial velocity of 1,910 feet per second, developed a total energy of 8,755 foot-tons, while the Armstrong 9-inch gun, throwing a projectile weighing 250 pounds, will only develop a total energy of 7,774, should the estimated initial velocity of 2,118 feet per second, which is very great, be attained. In the production of field artillery, Herr Krupp has also far surpassed the Elswick firm, and we must, therefore, regard the recent assertion that the Government has "adopted" the Armstrong 13-pounder as the new service pattern for the Artillery as, at least, premature. The War Office has purchased but one battery of these guns, which has not left Woolwich to undergo the usual tests at the Shoeburyness butts. It cannot be denied, however, that so long as the War Office remains as at present constituted, Elswick need fear no competitors, for other guns, such as the Vavasseur or Palliser, have but a meagre chance of ever being tried by a department whose motto, so far as guns are concerned, seems to be, "No others need apply." And yet, strange to say, the Vavasseur steel guns are the only ones manufactured in this country which, in the opinion of competent foreign critics, have been found able to sustain the character of English gun-makers, "even on the high standard of comparison established by Mr. Krupp." Accidents have happened with both Woolwich and Elswick heavy ordnance on board the Thunderer and the Duilio, and yet Palliser guns subjected to the same strain have withstood the ordeal. It is not to be wondered at, under such circumstances, that these systems, which in their construction are nearly identical, should now be viewed with suspicion. And when we come to consider that the new Armstrong and Krupp guns are of equal weight, and that if the power of each was equally developed, we see that we should have equal energies developed per ton of gun; but instead, we get from the Krupp gun an energy per ton of gun of 484 foot-tons, while from the Armstrong gun we only get an energy of 432 foot-tons per ton of gun. It is consequently evident that the time has arrived for allowing other gun manufacturers a fair field, by curtailing somewhat the favouritism which has for many years past been the chief characteristic of the selections made by the Ordnance Department of the War Office. General Campbell may consider Sir William G. Armstrong to be the best gun-maker in the world, but that is no reason why the productions of others should not be fairly tested by the new point of comparison to which we have just called attention, and now considered of so much importance abroad, that it is being generally adopted as the new standard of comparison to which to refer competing guns. The antagonism which exists between the War Office and the Admiralty in regard to new guns should also be inquired into. It has no raison d'être, and can but be seriously detrimental to the Navy. That General Campbell should have the power to seriously interfere with the action of the Director of Naval Ordnance, and retard the armament of our ships, is simply incomprehensible, and the sooner the present state of things is put an end to, the better.

"Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage," unless he has done good work in times past, and is kept on, as the late Mr. Paddy Green retained Herr von Joel at Evans's, "in consequence of his long and faithful services," even when the poor old siffleur could whistle no more, and was scarcely competent to carry round his box of cigars from table to table. But "by fate's unkind decree," as enunciated by the War Office oracle, the veteran generally is defunct at 70 years of age, and it is only in such cases as those of Sir John Michel and of a few others that the exception is allowed which proves the rule. There is no one more entitled to gratitude and respect than the old soldier. There are in the list of General officers some, if not many, who have attained their rank without seeing much hard service or any service at all with a serious enemy, whom it would be extremely unjust to hold up to the country as undeserving their rank, because they had not been fortunate in their early career. Among them are men whom their comrades and the Service recognise and know to be officers of great technical skill and military capability, but who have had only peaceful colonial garrison or home service to point to as a professional record. There are, however, to be found in the Army List the names of General officers who have somehow or other attained their rank with a minimum of work of any kind,—military "Topsys," who have "growed" to be Generals, and who still cumber levées and Court balls, and the Senior "clamouring" for regiments, and for all sorts of honours because they are old—because they "are senior" to some one or other who has just been named to honour or advancement for recent work. These are "Show-Generals,"—wind-bags tied up in red tunics and gold sashes, who swell the columns of the Army List, and add nothing to the credit or strength of the Army. In the Navy, men are ruthlessly set aside, if they have been unlucky, and even the "yellow Admirals" list is jealously guarded; but if Buggins goes on half-pay after a considerable experience of hunting quarters in Ireland, fishing in Canada, a turn at pig-sticking and tiger-shooting in India and the delectations of Malta and Gibraltar, and then settles down comfortably within a breakfast-walk of his club, he may grow grey in walking between Pall Mall and Hyde Park Corner, with the certainty that if he has a robust constitution he must become a "show General." And very nice many of them are. They look well, dress well, and are highly ornamental, but they are not always cheap at the money. Some, indeed, have invested considerable sums, and have not made much out of the Army; but if it be considered what they have got in the mere acquisition of their rank, without which many of them would be poor, indeed, it may be thought that some of these bogus Generals have not done so badly after all.

The losses which accrued to the Crown by the purchase and resale of certain stores by the late Government may have been unavoidable, and we are far from intending to convey any censure upon those who were responsible for the transactions. It is, however, a circumstance to be deplored, and one for which a remedy should be sought. The real evil would seem to lie in a want of concert between the Admiralty, the War Department, and the India Office, in regard to the purchase and sale of stores; and this points to the conclusion at which Mr. Rowsell arrived when he was Director of Navy Contracts, that the only satisfactory arrangement that could be arrived at in order to avoid the extravagant competition caused by different departments entering the market, and often practically bidding against each other for the purchase of the same stores, lies in the establishment of one purchasing department, through which demands should be made for all stores, whether they are required for the Army or the Navy, or indeed for any other public service. A select committee of the House of Commons investigated the question some years ago, and if we recollect rightly, dissolved without making any final report; but it had the effect of eliciting a great deal of valuable information, and of bringing to light some startling facts. It was found that different departments at times were making large purchases of the same articles, and so enhancing the price each had to pay; sometimes, when the same articles were tendered for, they were bought at a much higher price by one department than another; at other times, it happened that one department was selling off surplus stock at reduced prices, while another department was at the same time calling for tenders for the supply of the same articles. The benefit of having stores supplied by a single department has been proved in the case of the Stationery Department, which is able to make much more advantageous contracts than would be obtained if each Government office made its own purchases; and we would strongly urge the Government, in its zeal for economy, to look into this question, and ascertain whether the same method of supply might not be very largely extended. The experience of the Admiralty Contract Department has been a very successful one, and a great saving of money, as well as a great increase of efficiency, has resulted from this concentration of all purchases of stores under one officer.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., will hoist his flag on board the Hercules and proceed to Portland on July 3. There he will be joined by the Audacious, Penelope, Hector, Warrior, Defence, Lord Warden, and Valiant. With this squadron the Duke of Edinburgh will proceed to the coast of Ireland, to join the Channel Squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., and the combined squadrons will then go on a three weeks' evolutionary cruise.

Wolverene, Beagle, Renard, and Sandfly. All those vessels were present at Sydney last Saturday, and will at once pay off and recommission there, the paid-off crews returning to England in the Raleigh.

Staff Commander Jarrad, who resigned his appointment under the Indian Government owing to the difficulties of his position in the Marine Surveying Department, has arrived in England, and has received his promotion this week. We learn that the Admiralty so far agree with Staff Commander Jarrad in the line of action he adopted, that the attention of the India Office has been called to the terms of the agreement under which this officer accepted employment in India, and which have not been strictly adhered to by those in authority in Calcutta.

We hear that the Philomel has been ordered to Jeddah on some special service, and that Commander Berners will be called on to act as a representative of the Foreign Office, at an inquiry to be held into some difficulty reported to have arisen, and in the settlement of which England and Persia are interested.

From a report just issued by the Moscow Cruiser Committee, we gather that the funds at the disposal of that corporation now amount to 4,005,215 roubles. or over half-a-million sterling. The donations received last year reached 251,690 roubles. The fleet now comprises six steamers, the Moscow, Russia, Petersburg, Nijni Novgorod, Yaroslave, and Vologda.

The disestablishment of the Naval Depôt at Rio de Janeiro will be finally carried out in September next, when the store-ship Wye will proceed to Rio, for the purpose of embarking the naval stores and transferring them to the newly-formed depôt at Monte Video, which port will in future become the head-quarters of her Majesty's ships employed on the Brazils station.

The number of foreign officers at present serving in her Majesty's ships is but five, three being Japanese, one Siamese, and one Chilian. The number is now to be increased by the appointment of an Egyptian sub-lieutenant—Mustapha Ghalib Bey—to the flagship in the Mediterranean.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour has now present with his flag the Alexandra, Rupert, Thunderer, Téméraire, Invincible, Cygnet, Torch, Condor, and Helicon, the three last-named vessels having left Malta to join the flag. The address of the Squadron for to-day is, "To the care of the Postmaster, Civita Vecchia."

As some of the midshipmen of the Royal Naval Reserve who were entered from the Worcester and Conway have now been on that list for more than seven years, a question has naturally arisen as to their promotion to the higher grades of the Reserve, and we believe that a number will shortly be selected for advancement to the rank of sub-lieutenant. At the same time, steps will be taken to thin the list of the names of those who have given up service in the Mercantile Marine, as not a few have done whose names are still to be found among those of officers of the Naval Reserve.

A revolution broke out at Buenos Ayres on June 16. The city is besieged and the port blockaded, and steamers are forced to discharge both passengers and cargo at Monte Video. Her Majesty's ships on the station have been ordered to assemble off Buenos Ayres to protect British interests.

We hear from Lisbon that, to assist the Portuguese armaments against China, the Russians have communicated to the Lisbon Government samples of their torpedoes, dynamite cases, and other explosive implements, and that Russian officers have been appointed to instruct the Portuguese in the use of torpedoes and submarine warfare.

The Admiralty, at the request of the Egyptian Government, have entered Mustapha Ghaleb Bey to serve as midshipman in the Royal Navy. He will be appointed to one of her Majesty's ships in the Mediterranean.

The Northampton, which cost such a large outlay at the ports before she was able to leave for her station, still goes on in her extravagant course. A few little tinkering jobs were done at Bermuda on her call there immediately after leaving England, and now after a short cruise in the West Indies, her return to Bermuda has been made the occasion for spending nearly a thousand pounds upon her in alterations and repairs.

The Admiralty has decided that every ship which carries one or more steam-boats shall in future be supplied with a spare 6-inch steam fog-whistle, together with a short branch-pipe, fitted with junctions for the purpose of connecting the whistle with the boiler when required. The whistle and branch-pipe will be supplied ready to be fitted and attached to the boilers of the boats, for the purpose of being used on a fog coming on when the ship is at sea, and under such circumstances steam is to be got up in one of the boilers in question, which is to be placed in the most suitable part of the ship for the sound of the whistle to be heard as far off as possible.

We drew attention last week to a letter which appeared in these columns pointing out how the Navy is made unpopular on the lower deck. We may add this week that many communications have reached us from various sources, endorsing every word written by our correspondent, "One who Knows the Blue-jacket." It is only too plain that the Admiralty Board might be well occupied in looking into this matter in all earnestness.

The Duke of Somerset will, on Friday next, call the attention of the House of Lords to the report of Mr. Ormiston on the harbour of Famagousta, and ask whether the Government has decided upon the execution of the works proposed. Mr. Ormiston's interesting report states that at Famagousta protection is only required from gales from the east, the open end of the harbour towards the north being sufficiently sheltered by the promontory of Karpas. His proposal is to make a breakwater along the ridge of the reef running parallel with the shore. This being carried a distance of 1¼ mile, the area enclosed would amount to 460 acres. Of this the deep-water anchorage, having a depth of five fathoms or more, would cover a rectangle 1,200 yards long, 600 yards wide, or 150 acres. The total cost, including £70,687 for dredging, £14,000 for a new wharf close to the town, £2,000 for lighthouse, £10,000 for removing old mole, and £10,500 for moorings for seven large ships 1½ cable apart, would be £272,453. A larger scheme proposed by Mr. Ormiston is to make the breakwater 1 2-3rd mile long, giving a deep-water anchorage of 225 acres, but the total cost of this would amount to £354,300. The time to carry out either of these works would be from four to five years.

A company has been formed to raise the Russian Imperial yacht Livadia, which was sunk off the Crimea two years ago. One-quarter of whatever may be recovered is to be handed over to the Russian Government, and the contract is to run out at the expiration of three years.

The principles laid down three years ago by Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B., during the controversy regarding the limitation of the armour of the Inflexible to the central portion of the ship, are not believed in by the Italian Admiralty, which has abandoned side armour altogether as a means of preserving stability, in both the Italia and the Lepanto. In these two vessels, whose dimensions and engine-power are greater than in any ship afloat, armour is only used to keep out projectiles from the engines and boilers, the magazines, shell-rooms, and passages leading therefrom to the upper deck, and the 100-ton guns in the casemated loading-chamber below the barbette towers. All other parts of these monsters, of 13,480 tons, load displacement and 15,000 calculated indicated horse-power, are exposed to the enemy's fire. The armament of each of these vessels will consist of four 100-ton guns, mounted at the extraordinary height of 32 ft. 8 in. above the water-line, besides 18 38-ton guns, six on the upper and 12 on the main deck. There are also four ports for the purpose of ejecting Whitehead torpedoes, and the bow is fitted with a powerful ram. The anticipated speed is over 16 knots.

According to the amended programme of work to be executed in the dockyards at home during the present financial year, the following ships now in the Reserves are to be repaired and completed for service: —Ironclads—Hotspur, Repulse, Sultan, Swiftsure; frigate—Shah; corvettes—Rover, Volage, Amethyst, Briton, Diamond, Thalia; sloops—Daring, Sappho; gun-vessels—Arab, Cracker, Lynx, Pert, Ringdove, Thistle; gunboats—Foam, Mallard.

The under-mentioned vessels are to be completed for service by March, 1881:—Ironclads—Inflexible, Superb, Orion; corvette—Conquest; despatch-vessel—Mercury; sloops—Doterel, Espiegle, Mutine, Kingfisher; gun-vessels—Algerine, Rambler, Ranger, Linnet, Swift; gunboats—Bullfrog, Redwing, Cockchafer, Bantam, Espoir, Grappler, Wasp, Wrangler; the paddle vessel Niger; and the gunboats for coast defence Bouncer and Insolent.

The Indian troopships are being rapidly pushed forward at Portsmouth for the ensuing trooping season. Nothing more than is absolutely necessary is being done to the Malabar, Euphrates, and Jumna, but the Serapis and Crocodile are undergoing thorough repair. About 500 artificers are employed upon each, and every effort is being made to complete the refits by the end of September.

The alterations proposed by Mr. George Fawcus in order to convert garrison or Naval standing gun-carriages to serve as a part of a siege or mountain train, and which are now being examined by the French authorities, enable the present standing gun-carriages to stand the shock of increased charges without jumping or rearing up, and take the shock and friction of the recoil off the truck wheels and throw them on to two iron plates, acting as skids or sleighs under the gun-carriage. Mr. Fawcus applies the lifting action of the truck elevating-levers on the rear eye-bolts to eye-bolts on the sides of the gun-carriage, for trailing right or left, or to throw the weight on the front wheels when required; and he also makes use of large front wheels, with double bearings for the axles, on metallic bracket-straps, applying a long roller-bar or a spindle, with two fixed end-wheels in rear, for the carriage to run on when the gun is fired, and thus force it in a direct straight line to the rear, if there should be any tendency to rear up during the recoil. By these means it is claimed that movable standing gun-carriages are given all the advantages of a traversing platform and all the easy movements of a field-gun on large wheels, for rapid transit (with a limber arrangement), or "action right or left," or even "rear."

Orders have been given for the Tay, which is in reserve at Portsmouth, to be at Liverpool by July 1, for the purpose of embarking a detachment of Naval Artillery Volunteers, for drill.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock was at Halifax in the Northampton up to June 4, and would probably remain there for some time. The Druid has been detached on fishery duties.

Acting Sub-Lieutenants Rolleston, Coxon, Barton, Gimlette, and Tizard, having successfully passed in gunnery on board the Excellent, have been confirmed in their rank.

Commodore Richards remained at Simon's Bay up to May 22, when the Dido was under orders to proceed to the West Coast as senior officer.

The Atalanta Committee will, for the present, meet on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and when witnesses are examined at the Sessions House, Westminster, the doors will be open to the public. A telegram received on Tuesday from Halifax stated that a barrel-stave had been found on the coast, twelve miles east, bearing the following words, written in lead pencil:—"Atalanta going down, April 12, 1880. No hope. Send this to Mrs. Mary White, Piers, Sussex. —James White." There is, however, not the slightest reason for supposing that the stave is a relic of the Atalanta, as wreckage from her would have been carried by the sweep of the Gulf Stream far away from the coast of Nova Scotia; and had the vessel been afloat at the date given, she would in all probability have been in England, seeing that she left Bermuda on January 31. A meeting has been held at Admiralty House, Portsmouth, when it was resolved that a "Portsmouth Atalanta Committee" should be nominated as a branch of the Mansion House Committee.

In celebration of the anniversary of her Majesty's accession to the Throne, all ships in port on Sunday last were dressed with flags, and a royal salute was fired at 1 p.m.

Commander Clodonino Urtuby, of the Argentine Navy, has, it is notified, been appointed Naval Attaché to the Argentine Legation in London.

A request has been made to the Admiralty that the time served by the Lieutenants who recently navigated the Chinese gunboats out from England may be allowed to count as sea-time, seeing that they were actually employed at sea. But as this would be creating a precedent which would apply generally to service by British Naval officers under foreign Governments, it has been decided that the application cannot be entertained.

From the China station we hear of an unpleasantness between a commanding officer and the second in command of a small ship. For some time the vessel has not borne a high reputation for comfort, and the contrast between this commission and her last has often been the subject of remark. The commander has shown himself to be one of a now exceptional type; but at last he has gone so far in his behaviour towards the senior lieutenant, that the matter has been referred to the Commander-in-Chief. The sympathies of the officers of the ship are wholly with the junior, and, we think, not without cause.

A Parliamentary return just issued gives particulars as to the infliction of corporal punishment in the Navy and Army during the ten years ending December 31, 1878. In each case the offence is stated. It appears that in 1869 corporal punishment was awarded to 61 men in the Navy, the total number of lashes inflicted being 2,301. In 1870, 56 men received in the aggregate 2,122 lashes, and in 1871, 51 men received 1,810 lashes. Of late flogging in the Navy has greatly diminished, there having been but four cases during the last year. This is entirely due to the Admiralty having steadily discouraged this mode of punishment for some years past, and not to any improvement in the discipline and character of the Navy, as is proved by the returns of recent courts-martial. In 1876, eight men received 312 lashes; in 1877, six men received 204 lashes; and in 1878, seven men received 228 lashes. During the same period there have been 38 cases of flogging in the Army, exclusive of cases in which military prisoners have been flogged in prison. Of these cases two occurred in 1869, two in 1873, and 34 in 1878.

The Russian Government has appointed a commission to conduct experiments for the purpose of deciding whether, with the recent inventions brought before the Russian Admiralty, it is possible to substitute naphtha fuel for coal. Russia possesses vast deposits of naphtha in the province of Baku, and for some time past naphtha and petroleum have been used, with a fair amount of success, on board the steamers of the Caspian Fleet. Recently, several companies were formed to work the naphtha springs at Baku, and one of them has brought out an apparatus the success of which has led to the appointment of the Commission in question.

The reduced list of assistant-paymasters is hardly equal to the demands made upon it, while "charges" are taken from this list, and we would suggest to the new Admiralty the advisability of making all "charges" appointments for junior paymasters, increasing the senior list by the requisite number. By this means some slight relief would be afforded to the junior list, the flow of promotion would receive a slight impetus—which is only too much needed—while but little extra expense would be incurred. The intermediate temporary rank of assistant-paymaster in charge ought to be abolished, for officers holding such appointments are to all intents and purposes paymasters, and the "charges" should be given to the juniors of that rank.

The inducements held out by the Admiralty to Assistant-Paymasters on the Retired List to take the post of cashier and storekeeper at foreign hospitals did not cause a rush of applicants. Either the terms offered were too poor, or retired officers are too comfortable to wish to return to Admiralty employment; for after waiting for many weeks, and also sending a notice to the papers that Jamaica Hospital still wanted a retired assistant-paymaster, the only applicant to be found was on the Active List, and he was permitted to retire to take up this berth. Had their Lordships thrown it open to retired officers who had commuted, there would doubtless have been more applicants, for many of them have dropped their capital, and would gladly have gone even to Jamaica to obtain certain employment.

The desirability of the modern system of press-copying circulars and other documents in public offices, where permanent record is required, may be questioned if durability is taken into consideration. There can be no gainsaying that the copying system now in force has its advantages in curtailing labour, and therefore expense, but there the advantage ceases, for the press copy taken is on flimsy paper, and unless the original is properly written and carefully manipulated in pressing, the copy is often difficult to decypher, even when newly struck off: what then it will be in the course of many years time only will prove. There are now at the Admiralty records a century old, with the ink as black as it was the day on which they were written. None can deny the necessity of national records such as those of the Navy or the Army being as permanent as they can be ensured, and it will be a great want of foresight and a national misfortune, if the records of the present day become illegible to our descendants a hundred years hence, while those of a previous century are still available for reference.

The question as to the support England was likely to give to the proposed international Polar expedition was referred to the Admiralty by the Foreign Office, and the reply was not altogether favourable to the undertaking. One thing was plain, that Mr. Smith's Board absolutely declined to pledge itself to do anything in the matter until something more tangible was placed before it. This was very wise, perhaps, but a little more encouraging reply would, we are assured, have been welcome to the Foreign Committee, which ventured to lay the matter before her Majesty's Government. Possibly next spring, when the time for starting draws near, they will scarcely be inclined to ask England's advice, if they have sufficient support from the nations on the Continent.

There are only twenty shillings in a sovereign, and whether one is dealing with pounds or millions of pounds, the result is the same,—you cannot have more than full change. This is pretty clearly illustrated by all the debates on the Navy Estimates in the House of Commons, and the conclusion of the whole matter would seem to be that Parliament must vote more money, if it wants more ships. It is idle for opposing political parties to denounce each other alternately, and to indulge in unmeasured abuse, now because the construction of ships is almost suspended, and now because ships are not repaired as rapidly as they should be, so long as they are ready to hurl charges of extravagance at each other across the table of the House directly another million or half-a-million is added to the total of the Navy Estimates. The fact is, a Navy such as this country requires is a very costly article, and with every advance of science the cost increases. If, then, there is to be a sort of understanding that the Estimates are not to exceed some ten millions annually, something which ought to be done must be left undone, and the Navy—like everything else in this country—must be the result of a compromise. What we should like to see, when we have a strong Government, is that it would have the courage to propose some year all that it really thinks desirable for the Naval Service, regardless of the strictures and cavils of political opponents; and we feel sure that the nation would not grumble at the expense, if it saw a corresponding addition to the country's power of attack and defence. If this were done, we should not only have such a Fleet as would ensure us a lasting peace, but many an admitted hardship and many an injustice, productive of discontent and dissatisfaction, would be removed.

"Old Tümpling," just nominated Field-Marshal by the Emperor, is something like a soldier, and fit stuff for handling the bâton—a kind of "old Dessauer" of a man, with immense aptitudes for fighting—and his appointment is a great compliment to the Army.

Mr. Childers, in answer to Lord H. Scott, stated on Thursday that a medal for the South African war would be issued in about three weeks to regiments on home service, and at a later period to corps abroad. The distribution would take place as fast as the names could be engraved on the medals. The delay which had hitherto occurred in respect to the issue of medals had caused great dissatisfaction, and he had before him plans by which he hoped the delay would be considerably shortened in future.

Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., has arrived at Thames Ditton from Canada, on the expiration of his period of service with the Dominion Government.

Appointments on the Staff of the School of Musketry, which have been hitherto held provisional for six months, are in future to be confirmed on the expiration of three months' probationary service, the same as other Staff appointments.

Sir J. Bailey asked the Secretary of State for War on Monday what steps he intended to take to give effect to the Royal Warrant of July 6, 1879, with regard to the Reserve of Officers. Mr. Childers stated, in reply, that 251 officers, who have retired from the Regular or Indian Military forces otherwise than on pension or gratuity, and officers of Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, who have applied for appointment to the Reserve of Officers, and who are eligible in all respects, will shortly be gazetted to commissions; and 246 officers who, on account of their having retired from the Service on pension or gratuity, are liable for further service up to a certain age if called upon, will be included in the Reserve, but will not receive any fresh commissions. The total number of officers at present noted and found eligible for appointment is, therefore, about 500.

Colonel Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., C.B., R.E., who accompanied the Marquis of Ripon to India lately, will leave Bombay next week for England.

Lord Fortescue has given notice that on July 5 he intends to call attention to the report of the joint Committee of the War Office and the Civil Service Commissioners on supplementing the literary examinations for the Army by physical competition.

An extra lecture, at three o'clock, will be delivered in the theatre of the Royal United Service Institution on Friday next, by Lieutenant-Colonel G. U. Prior, 100th Regiment, on "Entrenching Tools," to be followed by a discussion.

The military tournament has proceeded with signal success at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, during the week, and the Royal Cambridge Asylum, the excellent institution in whose interests the meeting was inaugurated, will, doubtless, receive a large addition to its funds. We much regret that the claims on our space render it impossible for us to give details of the several contests. It must not, however, be supposed that our omission to do so results from any want of sympathy on our part in the objects the promoters of the meeting have had in view.

With the arrival of General Skobeleff at Tchikishlar, the war against the Turcomans may be said to have practically commenced. Last year, the army consisted of 15,000 troops, not including the garrisons of the forts along the Atrek. Respecting the number this year, no intelligence has as yet transpired, and so far as we have been able to ascertain, no important movement of troops has yet taken place in the Caucasus. Nothing probably will be definitely decided upon in regard to the strength of the impending expedition, and the direction it is to take to the Akhal Tekke region, until Skobeleff has visited the camps at Tchikishlar and Krasnovodsk, and the outposts at Tchat and Douz Oloum. The only officers Skobeleff has taken with him are Colonel Lenkovitch, who is to be chief of his staff, and two adjutants. Although nothing is being published about the expedition in the Russian papers, it is causing great excitement in military circles, and the opinion is freely expressed that Skobeleff will be at Geok Tepe before September, and at Merv by the beginning of next year. To those of our readers who are inclined to follow the operations of the campaign, we may recommend Vambery's Travels in Central Asia, McGregor's Khorassan, and the work which Messrs. Allen have just brought out on Lomakin's campaign last year. The latter contains a map of the region as far as Geok Tepe, and a descriptive account of the Atrek and Akhal Tekke oasis. Russia is not stagnating. Although there are no signs of an immediate war, she is making preparations for the inevitable future collapse of Turkey by filling all her magazines and stores along the Black-Sea coast and Transcaucasia. The establishments at Moscow, St. Petersburg, and Kieff for supplying the Army with tinned products and preserved food, are working night and day to complete the orders recently received from the Minister of War, and as each magazine receives its complement of stores it is visited by a commission of officers, who certify to the genuineness of the articles, and seal them up, to keep them from the pilfering hands of the store-keepers. The abominable rubbish which filled the magazines when the war broke out in 1877 is not likely to be repeated again in Russia, and the next great campaign will, no doubt, find the Czar's Army better prepared for the contest. That official corruption will be effectually got rid of is not to be thought of, for a moment; but, owing to the reforms recently introduced into the Intendance, it will not be so conspicuous, and its effects will, consequently, be less disastrous.

General Sir Frederick Haines has been lately much censured by the Indian papers on account of his review of the Report of the Army Commission, the publication of which, by some local Marvin, has also created some surprise and consternation at head-quarters. However, it was obtained; the paper was published by the Calcutta Statesman, and has been freely animadverted upon on all sides. There are, indeed, one or two unfortunate points in it, which offer very favourable openings to Sir Frederick's critics. He endeavours, as a prelude, to disparage the constitution of the Commission at its final sittings, by showing that some of its most important members were called away, and insinuating that the complete Report has not received attention at the hands of those absent members, and does not embody their views. Yet the Report itself says, in alluding to the sudden departure of Sir F. Roberts, Colonel Macgregor, and others for Afghanistan, that happily before that event occurred the Commission had been enabled to arrive at a conclusion on all the general points of the Report. The Report, moreover, is signed by the absent members, and it is to be supposed that they knew to what they were appending their names. The Chief's allusion to Sir Peter Lumsden as having been engaged for some weeks in "penning" his famous protest, and as therefore prevented from giving his undivided attention to the final drawing-up of the Report, is well calculated to excite ridicule. But there are no grounds for some of the very violent language that has been used characterising Sir F. Haines's remarks as a State paper of unexampled incompetency and intemperance, and a disgrace to everybody concerned in it. In his view of the recommendations of the Report as to the position and duties of the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. Haines will probably have the opinion of all reasonable critics with him. If the four Army Corps' plan is carried out, each complete in itself and controlled in every respect by its own commander, the military duties of the Commander-in-Chief in India will be reduced to a mere pageant. If at the same time the Commander-in-Chief is deprived of his seat in Council, his position as the military adviser of Government loses its entity. The Commander-in-Chief will, in fact, have no army and no political functions. The certain result would be the abolition of the post altogether, and it is not impossible that the Commission, or its active members, had this end secretly in view. The system of four complete and distinct Army corps seems to have very little to recommend it. It might act very well in peace, when each army would occupy its own territory, but remove one corps for active service and the whole fabric falls to the ground. The three corps remaining would have to be redistributed to occupy the country vacated, and the corps on service having no other reserve would have to look to them for its relief and reinforcements. That is, the two characteristics of the system, the distinct unity of each corps and its territorial connection, would ipso facto disappear. Before the assembling of the Commission, one of the chief incongruities to which it was popularly supposed its attention would be drawn, was the existence of the semi-independent commands-in-chief of Bombay and Madras, but to avoid Charybdis the Commission have rushed upon Scylla, Instead of three Commanders-in-Chief, they recommend five, one of whom, indeed, is to be a cypher. A far simpler arrangement can surely be arrived at. For the British Army, which is scattered all over the world, one Commander-in-Chief is considered sufficient, and it would seem reasonable to suppose that one would be sufficient for India also. Let there be also one Indian Army under one chief. Where is the difficulty?

An officer lately serving in Afghanistan is engaged in collecting materials for a short volume of interesting anecdotes, &c., of the late campaign. Communications from officers and men engaged, or from their friends, are therefore invited, addressed, "Khyber," Post Office, Norwich.

The Lords of the Admiralty have awarded a gratuity of £40 to Mr. R. P. Saunders, the chief constructor at Chatham Dockyard, in consideration of the successful launch of the Constance on June 9.

There have been a great many letters and articles of late on the subject of Army Doctors being considered in the light of "combatant" officers, and a spice of logic has been brought to bear upon it. The public, however, may be pardoned if it would prefer to hear a little more of competence and less of combativeness, urging as its excuse that a physician's province is to heal, and not to kill. It would like to see some sounder system advocated, that would be sufficiently attractive to induce the higher order of students, who are apparently required, to join the Army Medical Department. Of course, there are occasions when a medical man has to fight with and even take command of soldiers, but these are not of such frequent occurrence as to necessitate his dividing his studies between medicine and manœuvres, which he would have to do if he wished to become a capable combatant. No; the hitch lies somewhere else, half-way between the schools and the Service. We are perpetually reading suggestions from a medical point of view, condemning or upholding the unification scheme, or pointing at some one in office as a scapegoat. It is only fair, therefore, that the question should be looked at from another stand-point, an outside one. The public do not wish in any way to interfere with doctors' grievances; on the contrary, it is only too willing to support them, if any beneficial result is to be gained thereby. Nevertheless, it cannot altogether shut its eyes to a state of things which —turpe dictu—is not altogether rare. As a matter of course, in such a large community, there must be some who are not all that can be professionally desired; but when a branch of the Service is well paid, and so rapidly promoted as this one, it is but reasonable to expect that it will be thoroughly efficient. That it is not entirely so, and that the blame in a great measure lies at its own door, is to be feared. There exists too often a feeling of mistaken esprit de corps, that prevents the topmost rivets of the chain of responsibility from taking prompt and decisive measures to remove an obnoxious or rusty link, lest the whole should be weakened or its "prestige" lowered. There is no profession, perhaps, which produces more able, brilliant, and distinguished men than the Medical one, the Army branch furnishing a large proportion out of the number; and to these the carelessness, or worse, of their comrades in science must be very galling and humiliating. Yet how loth they are to sacrifice an offender, though they should be the very first to do so! How often, when you make inquiries about an Army doctor, do you receive the answer, "Oh, he's a very good fellow!" when what you want to know is, whether he is a clever practitioner? And it is this very "good-fellowship" which in some men tends to sap (although in others it only adds to) their "good-doctorship," so to speak. Whether the "good fellow" gets through his work as the veriest routine, or devotes his whole time and energies to it, he draws the same pay, gets the same promotion. There is no examination required after he has become a surgeon-major, in twelve years, no inducement for an indolent man to work more than the necessary minimum. This may be urged against combatant officers or any fixed-salaried appointments, except that the former, no matter what their length of service, cannot be employed on the Staff without undergoing a garrison course or qualifying through the Staff College; but it must be borne in mind that a doctor is always on duty. Like the small special constable's remark to the rough, "If I kill you, it's justice; but by Jove, if you touch me, it's murder,"—so with the medical man. To him, "Non licet in bello bis peccare;" the least error or neglect on his part is aggravated a hundred-fold in civil practice would prove his ruin. With such grave responsibilities on his shoulders, no one would grudge him the highest reward or salary; but when such responsibility weighs so lightly that it almost ceases to be responsibility at all, there one would like to see some reform. That the above is the case with many is, it is to be regretted, only too palpable. Take Surgeon-Major Splint. We find him with a string of racers, which he trains, and perhaps rides, himself. It would be, of course, quite absurd to say that because a man races a little, he must neglect his work; but it is also absurd to maintain that any one continually occupied with the cares of a racing stable can devote his thoughts and time, for which he is paid by Government, to his profession. Dr. Splint is probably better acquainted with "Ruff's Guide," or "Hayes on Horseflesh," than the latest thesis on diphtheria, and if consulted on the subject, would, from sheer force of habit, most likely recommend a blister. Again, there is Surgeon O'Swill. He is not a bad fellow at heart,—far from it. Yet he has to thank a watchful Providence for keeping him daily clear of homicide. Those who know him refrain from calling him in, naturally concluding that a shifty eye, shaky hand, and general appearance of having dined "not wisely, but too well," at any hour of the day, does not tend to inspire confidence. And a doctor without confidence accorded him is nothing. When Dr. O'Swill has exceeded more than usual, the chances are his brother medico, with that mistaken esprit de corps before alluded to, will put him on the sick-list, as suffering from dyspepsia, although at last it becomes only too well known what his "dyspepsia" stands for. Until O'Swill commits himself irrevocably, or does something extra glaring, little practical notice is taken of it by the profession. He is sometimes, it is true, sent to some Ultima Thule, which is decidedly rough on that out-of-the-way place. In any case, he has charge of some men, and if he does not drink himself to death too rapidly, is pretty sure of promotion. Dr. Pool is seldom absent from the billiard-table, and would, no doubt, be more proud of being selected to play some starring champion than to edit the Lancet. Dr. Buskyn is always getting up theatricals, detailing the longest parts—presumably as having most spare time —to himself; whilst good-natured, kind-hearted Dr. M'Gluttone, the best of mess presidents and judges of wine, devotes his whole life to the thinking-out of cunningly-devised mayonnaises or clarety-dished

"Venison,

He is really such a "good fellow," it would be cruelty to ask him to do anything beyond the prescribed jog-trot formulæ. If suddenly called upon for more, he would in all probability consider himself aggrieved, or, having a disagreeable necessity to perform, get it over as hurriedly as possible. Are these exaggerated cases? If any one thinks so, let him first telescope his or her own experience, or ask for that of others, before asserting that they are, bearing in mind that it is, of course, only the exceptions who are being treated. One more example of what may be termed the fault of a crept-in system. It is reasonably supposed that when a surgeon-major or surgeon is given charge of a regiment or battery, the supervision of that regiment or battery will require his undivided attention. Otherwise, why not hand him over a larger care? Yet how frequently do you find the doctor in such charge, especially if a clever man, in continual request elsewhere? The country pays him a fixed salary—whether sufficient or not, is another question—to look after her officers and soldiers; and there need be no objection to his turning an honest penny by consultations or otherwise, as long as he can be positive that his absence will not interfere with his duty. But can he make sure of this? Certainly not. He may arrange to attend Mrs. Quiverfull, who usually gives little trouble and a large fee. Out of sheer perversity, however, upon some occasion she may develop alarming symptoms; and while he is engaged in a fee'd case of life and death, No. 9,999, Private Thomas Atkins, may be inconsiderate enough to get cholera or fall down a well. What is he to do? His fee'd duty lies here, his salaried one there at the regimental hospital, so if he cannot at once get some equally good doctor to take the case off his hands, he acts unjustly to either the one or the other of his employers. This may be and is probably an extreme argument, but nearly everything that can happen has already happened. As before stated, the above are happily only the exceptions. They are semi-imaginary characters, upon whom, if any one tries to fit a cap, it would be very much to be regretted. Moreover, they are not meant for the "ninety and nine who need no repentance," but for the one sinner—whether bibulous or otherwise—who does.

THE RETIREMENT OF PURCHASE LIEUTENANT-COLONELS.

"A Civilian who Respects Fair-play" writes:—"In your paper dated May 29, in an ably, fairly-stated leading article on the late Royal Warrant, 'Concerning the Compulsory Retirement of certain Lieutenant-Colonels,' it is well said that such a proceeding has aggravated the feeling of suspicion and distrust throughout the Army. It is even felt keenly by those who at present benefit by the gross injustice inflicted on these officers, most of whom are men of special worth as commanding officers, and who have deserved well of their country, while, on the contrary, they now have received a summary and most uncourteous dismissal, with pecuniary loss as well. The tombstone inscription, "Such as I am to-day, so mayst thou be to-morrow," not inaptly expresses the secret feeling of those now at the mercy of a Secretary of War. Since this flagrant breach of that faith to which the soldier imagined he might trust his vital interests, all feel with truth that if Col. Stanley considered himself bound by no honour towards those lieutenant-colonels, why should the present Secretary of War feel himself more so towards other officers? At any moment, every promise or 'warrant' may be cast to the winds. Then, to take the manner and way of carrying out the breach of faith. Had Col. Stanley seen fit even to allow a reasonable time to elapse before bringing his Warrant into action, or until offers of other employment had been made to each 'Purchase colonel,' the injury would have been less. Some consideration for the past services of these officers would have been shown, although the breach of faith would have remained as it is, throwing an odium on the 'Conservative' party, as your article justly says, 'hitherto directed to watch the Liberals.' The injured officers might have partly forgiven the rather miscalled 'honest endeavours' to rectify 'Lord Cardwell's legacy of mischief and inefficiency,' had Col. Stanley not aggravated the injustice by hurrying matters in the most outrageous manner; evidently that he might have no 'legacy,' but, at the expense of all soldierlike feeling, carry through his own dishonest measure before he himself was dismissed by the country. There is one sentence in your article which, in what it implies, is inaccurate; in fairness to these scandalously ill-treated officers, it should be commented on. It is said, 'the authorities, having exhausted all the resources of moral pressure, had recourse,' &c. This seems to imply much. The facts of the recent transaction are well known to every officer in the Army by this time. An intimation was given some short time before the appearance of the Warrant in question that such a Warrant was in contemplation at some future period, and the officers were given to understand that other employment would be first offered, and the intimation was considered in that light. Few, if any, of the lieutenant-colonels were offered employment; nor did any further communication reach them. Many of them were abroad, and had no time even to answer or inquire before they received the Warrant itself, offensively worded, and dismissing men who in many cases have done their work exceptionally well. They were led to believe the option, such as it was, was in their own hands. They found themselves deprived of their regiments at two months' notice, without option, compensation, or employment, which to many means ruin. Had they misbehaved as 'officers and gentlemen,' could much greater harm have been inflicted? Col. Stanley may rest assured he has not raised the character of his office or his party, nor increased the respect of the Army, nor its confidence in either, by 'advising' an Act which too much suggests the badly concealed hurry and ill-temper of a disappointed and rejected party, determined to carry through at its last grasp a questionable measure in a more than questionable form, fearing that the victorious incomers might hardly care to endorse the breaking of their own previous arguments in this high-handed, rough-shod form. Col. Stanley, in any case, might, although 'advising' the acting of the part of the famous Claude Duval, yet have recollected that noted highwayman was famed for clothing his arbitrary acts in courteous and gentlemanlike language and manner; and although, in common with a Secretary of War of the present, the eighteenth-century marauder held 'nothing sacred,' and in taking what he wanted, was in action as sharp and short, yet his address to those he dispoiled was generally a model of courtesy and propriety. As the late Secretary of War did not disdain to 'advise' the following of one part of his example, why did he not do so with that of the other and better part? That he might with advantage, to the credit of his office, have done this, is the opinion of many, both civilian and military."

Brevet Lieut.-Col. W. C. Justice, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion, has been ordered by the Secretary of State for India to vacate his appointment of Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., Mhow Division, and is now en route to England.

Mr. Brassey, M.P., on Thursday distributed the prizes to the boys of the training ship Conway, in the Mersey. Referring to the losses of the Eurydice and Atalanta, he said that the Admiralty were following the advice of the most experienced seamen, both in the Royal Navy and the mercantile marine, in selecting sailing ships for the early training of seamen, and he expressed the hope that, sad as were these disasters, the Admiralty would not be deterred by the apprehension of danger from sending young seamen to learn their profession where and when it could alone be learned—in daily conflict with storm and tempest. It was thus alone that experience could be gained. Mr. Brassey dwelt with much earnestness upon the necessity of the most cordial understanding between the Royal Navy and the merchant service. He spoke with great hopefulness of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers.

The annual inspection of the Corps of Commissionaires was made on Sunday by Lieut.-Gen. E. A. Whitmore, C.B. in Westminster Hall, where the corps paraded under the command of their chief and organiser, Capt. Walter, aided by Major Wilkinson (adjt.) and Capt. James and Winhoe (assistant-adjts.). The effective was very strong, far exceeding that of many battalions of the Line. Serjt.-Major Barry had no reason to be dissatisfied with the result. The inspecting officer expressed himself exceedingly pleased, and congratulated the veterans on their bearing and discipline, and on the good reports he had heard of the way they acquitted themselves of the civilian duties which it was now their lot to fulfil. Capt. Walter having returned thanks, the regiment formed fours, and marched to St. Michael's Church, Burleigh Street, Strand, where they attended service, and an appropriate sermon was preached by the incumbent, the Rev. Dr. Townsend. Conspicuous among many brave men was Private Hitch, of the 24th, one of the mutilated heroes of Rorke's Drift, the only wearer of the Victoria Cross now in the ranks of the Commissionaires. We regret we have not space for the remarks of Gen. Whitmore and for the modest reply of Capt. Walter, and we can only repeat the expression of our wish last week that some recognition of so much good work for the Service and the country may be accorded ere it be too late.

One of the most interesting archæological finds ever brought to light in the north of Europe is, says the Timber Trades Journal, now in process of being exhumed at Sandefjord—namely, a complete Viking ship, such as were used by the fierce Northmen in their raids 1,000 years ago on the coast of Britain and North France. What makes this discovery so valuable, from an archæological point of view, is the unusual size of the vessel, and the completeness with which she has been found. The portion of the ship which is already brought to light shows that it must have been at least 75 feet long, and placed in the sepulchre of some mighty Viking completely provided with the necessary sails and in full rig, as they were wont to enter upon those raids which made the name of Northmen so dreaded. An interesting thing is the finding of a number of shields, and the position of these shields is in perfect agreement with the position assigned to such on the remarkable piece of tapestry which was found at Bailleaux, in Normandy, representing William the Conqueror's passage across the Channel to England, and which it is supposed was worked about the close of the eleventh century. The vessel and its contents will probably be placed by the authorities in a museum, where it will be well worth a visit by English archæologists.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. H.R.H. Field-Marshal the Prince of Wales wore the uniform of one of the regiments of Household Cavalry, of which he is colonel, at the Court ball on Thursday. There was a mistake in the spurs, which was detected by the Duke of Connaught, whose eye is almost as keen as that of his royal brother in matters of dress uniform.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The Standard says "the regiment will proceed to India in the course of the winter," but the Boers may have something to say to that arrangement before then.

4th Hussars. The regiment will arrive at Aldershot from Shorncliffe as follows, and will be encamped on Jersey Brow and attached to the Cavalry Brigade, viz.:—3 officers and 93 men by rail, on Monday; 19 officers, 299 men, and 328 horses by march-route on Wednesday. Major Montague is to be gazetted to the command, vice Col. Montgomery-Moore, who has left the regiment after a long service, over 12 years of which has been passed in command, carrying with him the respect of all ranks, it having been his constant study to promote the interest of the regiment in every way in his power. Brevet Major Philips obtains the majority.

5th Lancers. Brigdr.-Gen. Massy had arrived at Rawul Pindee when the mail left India, and had assumed command of the brigade. He was most heartily welcomed on his arrival. The regiment arrived at Aldershot on the 18th and 19th inst. from Woolwich, and is encamped on Farnborough Common. The strength was 16 officers, 409 men, and 352 horses. At a farewell inspection, Major-Gen. Turner, commanding the district, complimented the regiment on its excellent behaviour whilst in Woolwich, its removal being a matter of regret with the whole population, civil and military.

7th Hussars. The detachment, stationed at Clogheen, will march to Cork to rejoin head-quarters on Monday next, Clogheen Barracks being under repair. The annual regimental dinner was held on the 17th inst. at Willis's Rooms. There were present—Lieut.-Gen. Benson, C.B. (president); Viscount Somerton, Viscount Lumley, Lord Vivian, Major-Gen. Steele, Lord M. Beresford; Cols. Whyte and Hall; Major M'Calmont; Capts. Peel, W. Hope-Johnstone, Shuttleworth, Trousdell, Trevelyan, Palliser, Paulett, Hutchins, Sartoris; Hon. A. J. G. Byng, Surg.-Major Max Grant, Mr. E. Atherley, and Mr. W. H. Seymour. Lieut. Viscount St. Vincent has arrived at the Curragh for duty on the personal staff of Gen. Sir John Michel, G.C.B., commanding in Ireland, during the drill season.

10th Hussars. Capt. Brabazon is acting as brigade-major to Brigdr.-Gen. H. H. Gough, V.C., C.B., commanding the cavalry of Sir F. Roberts's force in the Logar Valley, Afghanistan.

12th Lancers. Major Tait is about to be promoted to the command, vice Col. Le Quesne, who has vacated on completing his five years, Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Russell becoming major and Lieut. Archdale captain.

14th Hussars. Lieut. Hamilton is acting as aide-de-camp to Brigdr.-Gen. Gough, V.C., C.B., who is in command of the cavalry attached to Sir F. Roberts's force in the Logar Valley, Afghanistan.

15th Hussars. Lieut. Sewell has passed in India the Government examination in Persian under Class VIII.

18th Hussars. The annual regimental sports were held on Monday at Hounslow, under most favourable auspices. The different items on the programme were well contested. The tent-pegging, heads and post practice, and bare back tournament in the mounted division, and the single-stick, fencing, &c., in the dismounted, being well fought for. The racing was particularly good, the eulogium passed by the Duke of Cambridge at Aldershot last year on the splendid training of the ridingmaster, Mr. Hodgins, one of the most painstaking of instructors, proving to have been well deserved.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major-Gen. J. Hills, V.C., C.B., left Cabul on May 8 with the force under Gen. Sir F. Roberts, detailed for service in the Logar Valley. Four guns No. 6 Baty. 8th Brig., and the Dejarat Mountain Battery, also accompanied the force, Col. C. R. O. Evans, 3rd Brig., acting as commanding R.A., with Capt. R. A. Launing and Lieut. H. V. Cowan as orderly officers.

When we heard from Cabul, Brevet Major G. T. Pretyman had left that city for the Logar Valley, as A.D.C. to Sir F. Roberts.

Lieut.-Col. H. P. Lane, 9th Brig. (late Madras), has been appointed a 1st-class Commissary of Ordnance on the Madras Establishment, vice Major R. C. Smith, deceased, and will shortly be seconded, Major and Brevet Col. A. P. Bainbridge becoming substantive Lieut.-Col.

When we heard from Galle, Lieut.-Col. G. J. Smart, 7th Brig., had arrived there to assume command of the Royal Artillery in Ceylon.

Lieut. A. H. P. Turner has passed the higher-standard examination, and Lieuts. W. H. F. Taylor, H. H. Waters, C. P. Fendall, G. T. Kelsart, A. B. Shute, G. Nugent, and J. H. J. W. Jervis have passed the lower-standard examination, in Hindostanee.

Lieut. G. E. A. Woods, 9th Brig., died at Delhi on the 19th ult., aged 24 years. The deceased entered the Army, Jan. 28, 1875.

We (Lahore paper) understand that a reference has been made by Sir Donald Stewart to the Commander-in-Chief as to the respective claims of Col. Lockhart, Bengal Infantry, and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Chapman, R.A., both of the Quartermaster-General's Department, to the appointment of chief Staff officer to Sir F. Roberts. Col. Chapman held the office with Sir Donald Stewart, but on the arrival of that General at Cabul, Col. Macgregor had naturally the paramount claims to it, so that it became necessary to provide Col. Chapman with another appointment. Col. Lockhart who has done admirable service with Gen. Roberts as assistant-quartermaster-general during the past campaign is not only greatly his senior in rank, but is an officer of proved ability and of distinguished courage and conduct. Col. Chapman has done good service, too, and has been chief Staff officer to Gen. Stewart.

The following order was published at Cabul on the departure of F Baty. A Brig. R.H.A. for India:—"Camp, near Zahidabad, May 10, 1880.—The Lieutenant-General commanding Cabul Field Force has great pleasure in placing on record the valuable services rendered by F Baty. A Brig. R.H.A. during the time it has served under his command. Commencing the campaign in Nov. 1878, this battery has participated in every action in which the Cabul Field Force has been engaged, and has sustained the high reputation which the R.H.A. has earned for gallantry in the field and strict discipline in quarters. F-A, R.H.A., was the first wheeled artillery to cross the difficult pass of the Shuturgardan, a feat which was accomplished without mishap of any sort, and one which reflected great credit on all ranks. Sir F. Roberts deeply regrets the loss in action, on Dec. 11, 1879, of Lieut. E. Hardy, R.H.A., and the death from cholera, at Shalozan in Aug. 1879, of Qrmr.-Serjt. Marfield (then provost-marshal to the force), and of the other gallant men of the battery. The Lieutenant-General assures all ranks of this battery of the regret with which he parts from them, and of his best wishes for their future welfare."

A Baty. A Brig. R.H.A., under command of Major S. J. Nicholson, proceeded on Wednesday from Aldershot to St. John's Wood Barracks as follows:—Mounted portion, 104, by march route, viâ Hounslow; dismounted, by rail from Aldershot Town Station to London. The other officers with the Baty. are Capt. St. A. Molesworth, Lieuts. H. S. Dalbiac, B. O. Cochrane, and St. A. B. Wade.

Lieut.-Col. A. K. Rideout, 11th Brig., proceeds to Devonport to be stationed.

Col. H. Brindon, 3rd Brig., is about to retire on a pension. Another pension for regimental colonels is vacant, by the death of Major-Gen. Gardner on the Retired List.

A telegram from Cairo states that "Major Baring, C.S.I., the English Comptroller-General, has been appointed Secretary of the Finance Department in India, being replaced in his post here by Mr. Auckland Colvin, the English member of the Caisse of the Public Debt."

Major-Gen. W. B. Gardner, Col. on the Retired Full-pay List, died at Cromal Lodge, Ardersier, N.B., on the 15th inst., aged 64 years. The deceased entered the Army June 21, 1834, and retired upon pension, July 6, 1867.

The death is announced of Lieut. F. C. D. Cornish, 3rd Brig., of fever, contracted on service in India. The deceased, who was son of Mr. F. S. Cornish, of Stoke Lodge, Stoke Hemings, Dartmouth, entered the Army Aug. 19, 1875.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Civil and Military Gazette hears that Col. E. C. S. Williams, C.S.I. (late Bengal) is proceeding out to India to take up the appointment of Director-General of Railways, now held by Mr. Willoughby Furnivall, C.E.

The Standard says:—"It is in contemplation to offer Gen. Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., an extension of his appointment as Inspector-General of Fortifications and Director of Works at the War Office for two years, in order that the Government may be able to benefit from his advice in the many important questions which will shortly be before them."

Lieut. F. J. Romilly has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Brevet Col. Æ. Perkins, C.B. (late Bengal), is at present employed as Commanding R.E. to Sir F. Roberts's force in the Logar Valley, Afghanistan.

The 9th and 20th Companies at Chatham have been placed under orders for foreign service. It is expected that both companies will go to Bermuda.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on June 21:—"Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., R.E., resumed his seat in the Council on the 8th inst. His term of office has now expired, and it is unknown whether he is to be allowed an extension."

Coldstream Guards. Capt. Pole-Carew does not accompany Lord Lytton from India, he being employed at present as A.D.C. to Sir F. Roberts in Afghanistan.

1st, or Royal Scots. Brevet Lieut.-Col. White succeeds to the command of the 1st Batn., vice Col. MccGwire, placed upon half-pay, Capt. Thompson getting the majority and Lieut. Hallewell the company. Lieuts. Ancketill and Pakenham, 1st Batn., are candidates for the Indian S.C. Lieut. Ancketill takes up duty with a Bombay and Lieut. Pakenham with a Madras N.I., on probation. Lieut. Altham, 1st Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 35th Bengal N.I., on probation.

3rd Buffs. The late paymaster-serjeant, James Lionel Head, 2nd Batn., who deserted last June at Pietermaritzburg, and was found to be deficient in his accounts to the extent of several thousand pounds, has been apprehended at Hopetown, having been identified by two Englishmen who had served as volunteers during the Zulu war.

6th Regiment. Capt. A. H. Harrison, 1st Batn., senior capt. of the regt., died at Aden on the 1st inst., after three days' illness from fever, aged 40 years. The deceased, who was son of the late Mr. H. Harrison, of Aigburth, near Liverpool, entered the Army, Dec. 13, 1857; became Lieut., Oct. 29, 1858; and Capt., June 8, 1867. He served with the regiment in the Hazara campaign of 1868, including the subsequent operations in the Black Mountains (medal with clasp). Lieut. Murray will most probably obtain the company thus rendered vacant. When we heard from Afghanistan, Brevet Major Morton had left Cabul as Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. of the force under Sir F. Roberts, which had been formed for service in the Logar Valley.

7th Fusiliers. Major Kerr becomes lieut.-col., vice Col. Waller, placed upon half-pay, Capt. Butler getting the majority and Lieut. and Adjt. Mortimer the company. Major Beauchamp is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., on promotion. A correspondent writes from Quetta on the 19th ult.:—"A draft of the 7th Fusiliers, which passed up on the 18th inst. to join the head-quarters of the regiment at Kandahar, presented a very different appearance to the hardy veterans of the 59th and 60th Rifles, who marched with Gen. Stewart. Most of the men of the draft were very young, and the trying march up the Bolan certainly did not improve their appearance. No doubt, the great difference in the temperature between day and night causes a great deal of sickness, but still there was a great falling-off, nearly all these 'men' being young, beardless boys."

8th King's. Lieut. Briscoe, 1st Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., having failed to qualify in the native languages, has been ordered to rejoin his regiment. Lieut. Grattan has been recommended for the appointment of musketry-instructor to the 2nd Batn.

11th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Birch, Major Watson, and Capt. Stawell all remain with the 1st Batn., on promotion.

17th Regiment. Lieut. Priestley and 2nd Lieuts. Reilly and Vint, 2nd Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. 2nd Lieut. Perry has been appointed acting adjutant and quartermaster of the detachment (4 companies) of the 1st Batn. at Nowshera.

18th Royal Irish. The 2nd Batn. moved on the 18th inst. from the South to the North Camp, Aldershot, and are attached to the 3rd Brigade, occupying D, G, and H Lines. Major and Brevet Col. Baker, C.B., is commanding the infantry of Sir F. Roberts's force in the Logar Valley, Afghanistan.

19th Regiment. The move of the 1st Batn. from Bermuda will be carried out in the course of the autumn or winter, the 26th Cameronians having been told off to provide the relief.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Straton, 2nd Batn, when we heard from Cabul, had left that city as superintendent of signallers with the force under Sir F. Roberts, for service in the Logar Valley.

23rd Fusiliers. Major and Brevet Col. O'Connor, V.C., becomes lieut.-col., vice Col. Prevost, placed upon half-pay, Brevet Major Walwyn, adjt. of the Royal Flint Militia, becoming major.

25th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Harvey will be promoted lieut.-col., vice Col. Ruddell, placed upon half-pay, Brevet Major Carwithen getting the majority.

26th Cameronians. The regiment is under orders for Bermuda, relieving the 1st Batn. 19th Regt. The 26th were stationed in Bermuda as recently as 1858, and since then have had a short period of service in India and Abyssinia.

27th Inniskillings. Capt. Buxton has taken up his duties as garrison instructor at York, on transfer from Dublin.

29th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Ffrench is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 35th Madras N.I., on probation.

31st Regiment. This regiment will proceed from Chatham to Dover, on the embarkation of the 77th Regiment for India.

34th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Puget has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

42nd Highlanders. The regiment—strength, 25 officers and 470 men—arrived at Aldershot on Monday from Parkhurst, and is attached to the 2nd Brigade, occupying C, D, and F Lines, South Camp. Capt Grogan has been recommended for the adjutancy of the Royal Perth Militia.

44th Regiment. 2nd Lieuts. Guilding and Brabazon have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

ROYAL MARINES.

A correspondent enquires:—"Is it not the fact that the red band of the Marines was removed when they were designated Light Infantry, and the black band substituted in accordance with the practice prevailing in the Light Infantry regiments of the Line, viz., the 13th, 51st, and 85th, with Royal facings, whilst the 8th King's, 25th King's Own, and 50th Queen's Own, not being Light Infantry, but having Royal facings, wear the red forage-cap band?"

Capt. C. E. Servante, R.M.L.I., has been granted leave of absence until his name is placed on the Retired List, in consequence of age.

The following officers of the Royal Marine forces who have volunteered for the Indian Staff Corps, and have been transferred to that branch of the Service, have left England en route for Bombay, viz., Royal Marine Artillery—Lieuts. Hall, Woon, Butler, and Farrant; Royal Marine Light Infantry—Hayes, Paul, Taylor, Williamson, Goldsmid, C. H. Powell, and H. C. Powell. It is believed that a further number of officers of the Royal Marines will shortly join the Staff Corps.

Since the reduction of the standard height for entry into the Royal Marines, recruits have multiplied considerably, and the depôt at Walmer has been fast filling up.

57th Regiment. "Surprise" writes:—"Can any of your correspondents explain how it is that in last night's Gazette (June 22) Supernumerary Capt. A. N. Hayne, 57th Regt., is brought into the regiment, vice Picot, promoted? Should the step not have gone down to the senior subaltern? Capt. Hayne was appointed aide-de-camp to the Governor of Ceylon in September, 1877, and was seconded in October, 1878. Capt. Hayne has not resigned his appointment, which will not expire till the end of 1882. Then why bring him back on to the establishment, and rob the regiment of a step of well-earned promotion?" Lieut. Lyde, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to do duty with the 11th Bombay N.I., on probation. Lieut. Lyde has passed the lower standard examination in Hindostanee.

60th Rifles. Lieut. Story is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 8th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

63rd Regiment. On the subject of the command lately vacant, the Bombay Gazette has the following remarks:—"The command of the 63rd Foot, rendered vacant by the decease of Lieut.-Col. Gordon, is to be bestowed upon the senior major, Major Auchinleck, the step going in the regiment, Brevet Major N. X. Gwynne getting his majority, and Lieut. Cook his company. There has been such a run of promotion in this corps recently, that it was believed that some senior major would be 'brought in' to fill the vacancy, and Col. Eteson, of the 3rd Foot, at present Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., Army Head Quarters, a brevet lieut.-col. of 1873, would be selected for promotion vice Gordon. Lieut.-Col. Auchinleck's commission of major only dates Oct. 1, 1877, so that he has been particularly lucky in obtaining command of the regiment so soon. He only exchanged into the 63rd in Feb. 1878. It would, however, have been extremely hard to deprive Major Gwynne, a brevet major of over 12 years' standing, of the step of regimental promotion which he has so well earned and now obtains."

67th Regiment. Lieut. Atkinson obtains promotion to a company, on the appointment of Capt. White to the Auxiliary Forces. Lieut. Le Marchant succeeds Lieut. Atkinson as instructor of musketry.

68th Light Infantry. We are very sorry to hear of so much sickness among the men of the regiment at Mean Meer.

70th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Ralston succeeds to the command, vice Col. Pigott, placed upon half-pay, Capt. Greatwood becoming major and Lieut. Smith capt. Lieut. Shawe, a probationer for the Indian S.C., having failed to qualify in the native languages, has been ordered to rejoin his regiment.

71st Light Infantry. Major and Brevet Col. Lambton succeeds Col. Macdonnell in command, Brevet Major St. Leger, from the adjutancy of the Hertford Militia, becoming major.

72nd Highlanders. The regiment left Cabul on the 8th ult., with the infantry under Brigdr. Baker's command attached to the force employed in the Logar Valley, under Sir F. Roberts. Capt. Kane is employed as A.D.C. to Brigdr.-Gen. Baker, C.B., commanding the infantry of the force operating under Sir F. Roberts.

74th Highlanders. Lieut. Goold-Adams is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 8th Bombay N.I., on probation.

77th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Colquhoun succeeds to the command, vice Col. Kent, placed upon half-pay; Brevet Lieut.-Col. Bengough, from the Supernumerary List, succeeding him as major. A rifle-match took place the other day on the Kingsdown Ranges, Walmer, between ten serjeants of the regiment and ten of the R.M.L.I., stationed at Walmer. The shooting on both sides was excellent. At the conclusion of 200 yards, the 77th scored 239 against their opponents 236. At the conclusion of 500 yards, the Royal Marines stood 226 against the 77th's 216, leaving the Royal Marines a majority of 7 points. But now came the final issue at 600 yards, at which the Royal Marines scored 206 against their opponents' 221, leaving the latter winners by 8 points. The match was conducted under Major Phillips, R.M.L.I., Instructor of Musketry to the Walmer Depôt. Serjt.-Major Rendell and serjeants of the Royal Marines welcomed their opponents on arrival, and entertained them to an excellent lunch, and on conclusion of the match, escorted them back to barracks, where dinner was provided, about 150 sitting down.

80th Regiment. One hundred and forty-seven soldiers of the above regiment, who have just returned from South Africa, were on Saturday last dispatched from King's Bridge Station, Dublin, to join the 38th Regiment (the linked battalion), hard at work with summer drills on the Curragh, and already under orders for India. These tried young soldiers will, doubtless, be of great value to the sister regiment when embarking for foreign service, but they did not appear (though there were no absentees) to appreciate the opportunities which may present themselves of adding to their South African honours so fully as could be desired. Maybe, they recollect still the prices of commodities loved by the British soldier which held in Natal, and dreaded repetition. Have none had any furlough as yet?

85th Light Infantry. The Bombay Gazette has the following:—"Considerable curiosity is evinced in military circles, in the case of Col. Appreyd, C.B., commanding the 85th K.L.I. This officer, it will be remembered, commanded a brigade in the Khyber column last year; and at the end of the 1878 Afghan campaign went home to Europe on short leave. On his return to take command of the brigade, it is stated he received a telegram at Aden, telling him that he need not rejoin, as he had lost his brigade command. This message the officer in question could not understand. He accordingly came up straight to Simla, and ventured to inquire the reason for this extraordinary procedure. His visit to Army Head-quarters was, however, of very little avail, for though the Commander-in-Chief, it is said, backed him up, the Government of India would have nothing to say to him. He (Col. Appleyard) was to take four months' leave in India; he would not be allowed to rejoin his regiment then and now on service, and had to go to Jullundhur, vegetate there, and brood over his undoubted wrongs. These four months have expired and the colonel is still kept on general leave, the anomaly being perpetuated of keeping an officer of high standing and experience away from his regiment while it is on service, and, as far as the public are aware, without any reasonable cause. If Col. Appleyard was unfit for his command, the Government were a long time discovering the fact, for he has for thirteen years been allowed to hold command of one of the smartest regiments in the British Army. It is also well known that this officer has always been held in high estimation by the military authorities both for his ability as well as efficiency. Both Sir Samuel Brown and Col. Appleyard have, however, done something, unknown to the public generally, to offend the higher powers, and hence we find two distinguished officers most unaccountably, and as far as appearances go, unjustly shelved." Major Beadon is to be promoted to the lieut.-colonelcy, vice Col. Appleyard, placed upon half-pay; Brevet Major White, from the adjutancy of the 2nd Oxford Rifle Volunteers, becoming major.

87th Fusiliers. Orders have been given for the regiment to be in readiness to proceed from Limerick to Guernsey and Alderney, in relief of the 107th. The command, vacant in consequence of the retirement of Col. Stevenson, who relinquishes the appointment to the regret of every officer and man of the regiment, all of whom recognised in him an able and thoroughly trustworthy "chief," devolves upon Brevet Lieut.-Col. Beazley, Brevet Major Todd becoming major. The company will be filled by Capt. Cox's transfer from the Supernumerary List.

93rd Highlanders. Lieut.-Col. Archibald Butler the younger, of Faskally, died at Killiecrankie House, Perthshire, on the 19th inst., in his 45th year. The deceased obtained his commission as ensign by purchase in 1854. He served in the Crimea, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and the Turkish medal). He subsequently landed with the regiment in Calcutta in 1857, and served in the Indian campaign of 1857-58, and was orderly officer to Col. the Hon. A. Hope at the relief of Lucknow (medal with clasp).

101st Fusiliers. 2nd Lieut. Saulez, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been posted to the 11th Bombay N.I., on probation.

105th Light Infantry. Capt. H. F. Wilson, late of the regiment, died at Cheltenham on the 3rd inst., aged 41 years. The deceased entered the Army, April 4, 1857; became lieut., July 7, 1859; capt., April 17, 1869, and retired lately by sale of his commission.

107th Regiment is under orders of readiness to move from Guernsey to Ireland, where it is proposed that it should occupy quarters at Buttevant.

Rifle Brigade. Col. Godfrey Clerk, 3rd Batn., has been granted leave of absence to the 30th inst., pending his appointment to the Staff of the Madras Army as Adjutant-General. Lieut. Sherston, 4th Batn., is employed as A.D.C. to Gen. Sir F. Roberts, commanding the force operating in the Logar Valley, Afghanistan.

28th Brigade Depôt (Warwick). Col. Dunne, commanding, by the permission of Lord Leigh, held a brigade field-day in Stoneleigh Deer Park on Wednesday. The "general idea" was that a force encamped in the park, consisting of the 1st Warwick Militia and 2nd Warwickshire Rifle Volunteers, were directed to advance on Coventry, forcing the passage of the river Avon at the bridge in the park, held by an outpost of the enemy from Coventry, with four guns commanding the bridge. A portion of the attacking force crossed the river higher up, and taking the enemy in flank, whilst a direct attack was made on the bridge, a passage was effected, and the heights that command the river were occupied; but the enemy, who had retreated towards Coventry, being shortly after strongly reinforced, a general retreat was decided upon, and the attacking force recrossed the bridge and, followed up by the enemy, gradually retired on their original camping-ground, where the whole of the troops marched past. A detachment of the 6th Royal Warwick Regiment, under Capt. Wilson, found the enemy, and the battery of the Royal Artillery from Coventry, under Major Best, assisted in the operations, which were very successfully carried out, the Line, Militia, and Volunteers all doing their best to act as if engaged in real warfare. Lord Leigh, who is honorary Colonel of the 1st Warwick Militia, most kindly provided his regiment with refreshments after its march from Warwick, and at the conclusion of the review Col. Dunne thanked him for the generous manner in which he had placed his magnificent old park at the disposal of the troops, enabling them to have an instructive field-day, whilst thousands of spectators were gratified by the sight.

1st West India Regiment. A correspondent writes from Sierra Leone:—"Her Majesty's birthday was duly celebrated at Sierra Leone yesterday, May 29. H.M.'s gunboats Flirt and Forester and the Colonial paddle-wheel Prince of Wales were decked out gaily with flags. The American brig Fury, of Boston, also ran up colours in honour of the day. There was a review in the morning in the town of Freetown, near the eastern battery. At noon, his Excellency the Governor (Streatham) held a levée at Government House, Fort Thornton. In the evening, there was a grand dinner at the latter place. At about 7.45 a.m., the troops in garrison, consisting of four companies of the 1st West India Regt., formed in line near the eastern battery. There was a large concourse of spectators present. The Governor having arrived, the Royal salute was given, and then the gunners of the 1st West stationed on the adjoining hill, in Johnston's battery, fired seven rounds, the last report of which was followed by the sharp rattles of the Martinis in the town as the first round of the feu de joie passed up and down the ranks. The band here played the National Anthem, Governor and officials bareheaded. This having been three times repeated, the march-past began. The Governor and his officials as well as a brilliant staff of officers, Control, Medical, and Military, occupied the central space by the flag-staff. The four companies then passed in open column of companies, and repassed in quarter-column. The marching was very good, and the stalwart West Indians, in their exceedingly picturesque Zouave dress, presented a brilliant and soldier-like appearance, which would have been highly appreciated in England, and no doubt was by the flourishing and peaceful citizens of Freetown. The proceedings being now over, the soldiers marched, with their band playing and colours flying, through the town and up the steep ascent to their mountain fort on Tower Hill. At 12 noon a very large assembly was received by the Governor at his levée, the Naval and Military being in their fullest dress. The room was most tastefully decorated for the occasion. At the conclusion of the ceremony, refreshment having been partaken of, a general dispersion took place. The dinner in the evening was largely attended by the élite of Sierra Leone. It was most successful, and thoroughly worthy of our popular and hospitable Governor." Lieut. Haughton, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

2nd West India Regiment. Lieuts. Clothier and Mackintosh, probationers for the Indian S.C., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Pay Department. Staff Paymaster and Hon. Major A. R. Rundle, paymaster of the 29th (Northampton) Sub-District, died suddenly at Bath on the 17th inst., aged 53 years. The deceased, who was in the Service previously as a combatant officer, and obtained the certificate of the senior department of the Royal Military College, was appointed paymaster June 3, and was for many years with the 23rd and 58th Regts.

Medical Department. The Standard says:—"The Treasury has sanctioned a grant of £500, to be expended in providing additional rewards for distinguished service, for distribution among the officers of the Army Medical Department." Considerable speculation was rife in India when the mail left as to the medical officer to be selected by the Marquis of Ripon for the office of surgeon upon his staff. Surg.-Major Moffitt was generally spoken of as first favourite for the coveted appointment, which the present incumbent has enjoyed for nearly 12 years. The names of one or two others have been mentioned as likely selections, and amongst them Surgs.-Major Ambrose and C. A. Maunsell. It was generally believed, however, that Dr. Moffitt, who is said to have considerable interest with the Marquis's family, would get the appointment.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Hertford. This regiment, which completed its annual training at Hertford on the 19th inst., was inspected on the 17th inst. by Col. W. H. Hawley, commanding the 33rd Sub-District, Bedford, who appeared to be satisfied with what he saw, and said that he should make a good report of the state of the regiment. The strength on the day of inspection was 25 officers and 749 non-commissioned officers and men, including the recruits who had been assembled since March 29 last. On the 14th inst., Brevet Major St. Leger, 71st H.L.I., who is about to leave in consequence of promotion, presented the officers' mess with a handsome silver-mounted claret-jug, in recognition of the kindness he has received from the officers during the time that he has been the adjt.; and on the 15th inst., Colonel Bruce Fellows and the officers entertained the county at a ball at the Town Hall.

Royal Flint Rifles. The adjutancy is about to become, vacant, Brevet Major Walwyn being required to rejoin his regiment, on promotion to a majority.

5th Middlesex (Royal Elthorne). Lieut. J. F. Walton son of Mr. T. Walton, of Maperton House, Somerset, died at Halifax, N.S., on the 18th inst., from the effects of an accident on May 11, while out shooting. The deceased was appointed to the regiment, Feb. 11, 1874.

Oxford. The regiment, which has won golden opinions at Aldershot by its smartness and soldierly behaviour on all occasions, leaves that station to-day for Oxford, on the completion of its training.

2nd Royal Surrey. This regiment, which completes its training to-day, was inspected at Guildford on Thursday by Col. Dean Pitt, C.B., commanding the 48th Brigade Depôt. The parade state showed some 800 men under arms, Lieut.-Col. Hartnell being in command. The drill and appearance of the men was most creditable, reflecting the greatest credit upon the officers, whilst, so far as physique is concerned, the men would hold their own against any Line regiment. Col. Dean-Pitt was evidently pleased, as well he might be, with the result of the inspection, which went far to show how valuable an auxiliary we possess in our constitutional force. This regiment was encamped during the training, but despite all inconveniences incidental to life in bell-tents in wet weather, the accoutrements were clean and well put on. Altogether, the 2nd Surrey are to be congratulated most heartily upon the result of the present year's training.

2nd Royal Tower Hamlets. The regiment, under command of Lieut.-Col. Halkett, assembled at Victoria Park Square on Monday, and afterwards proceeded to Aldershot, where it is encamped on Redan Hill for its period of training.

2nd Royal Lanark. The remains of the late Major W. S. Dixon were conveyed from London to his seat at Bellisle, Ayr, and were buried on Wednesday in Alloway churchyard. The following officers from Lanark were present at the funeral:—Col. Buchanan, Capt. Dixon, Lieuts. J. Thomson-Carmichael, Hon. L. Ogilvie, and Napier, Surg.-Major Adams, and Qrmr. Blackwood. Major Dixon was a J. P. for Lanark and Deputy-Lieutenant of Ayrshire. The recruits of the regiment, numbering 200, assembled at Lanark Muir on the 7th inst. for the annual training.

Carlow Rifles. The regiment assembled on Monday last for its annual training, mustering 414 men. The following officers were present:—Col. Keogh (in command); Major Butler; Capts. Butler, O'Brien Butler (Hon. Major), and Headley; Lieuts. Lawe, Eustace, and Lloyd; 2nd Lieuts. H. G. Crawford, A. G. Crawford, and Wolfe; Major and Adjt. Tanner; and Surg.-Major Rawson.

Wicklow Artillery. The regiment, which assembled on the 31st ult. for training, is under canvas on the Murragh. There are 340 rank and file and 31 non-commissioned officers. The officers are:—Major Bayly (in command), Capts. Hoey, Howard Brooke, Heighington, and Welch; Lieuts. Howard, Tighe, and Magee; Capt. and Adjt. Evans, and Surg.-Major Brew.

The following regiments, 24 in number, complete their training to-day (Saturday), and will be dismissed at the places indicated:—Artillery—Royal Glamorgan, at Swansea; Haddington, Berwick, Linlithgow, and Peebles, at Dunbar; Suffolk, at Ipswich (this regiment has trained at Landguard Fort); and the Yorkshire, at Scarborough. Engineers—Royal Monmouthshire, at Monmouth. Infantry—1st, or East Devon, at Exeter; Royal South Lincoln, at Grantham; 3rd Middlesex (Royal Westminster), at Hounslow; Northampton and Rutland, at Northampton; Nottingham (Royal Sherwood Foresters), at Newark; Oxford, at Oxford; 1st Royal Surrey, at Kingston-on-Thames; 2nd Royal Surrey, at Guildford; 1st Warwick, at Warwick; North York Rifles, at Richmond; Armagh Light Infantry, at Armagh; Cavan, at Cavan; Royal Southdown Light Infantry, at Downpatrick; Fermanagh Light Infantry, at Enniskillen; Kildare Rifles, at Naas; Kilkenny Fusiliers, at Kilkenny; Leitrim Rifles, at Carrick-on-Shannon; Royal Meath, at Navan; and the Wexford, at Wexford.

The following regiments are under orders to assemble on Monday morning for their annual training, the recruits having previously undergone their preliminary drill:—Royal Cumberland, at Carlisle (train at Brackenben Moor); 2nd, or North Durham, at Durham (train at Redcar Camp); 1st Royal Lancashire, at Lancaster; 3rd Royal Lancashire, at Preston (train at St. Anne's-on-Sea Camp); 6th Royal Lancashire, at Ashton (train at Kingholm Camp); Royal London, at Finsbury; 2nd Somerset Light Infantry, at Bath; Royal Sussex Light Infantry, at Chichester, Royal Westmoreland Light Infantry, at Carlisle (train at Brackenben Moor); 6th West York, at Halifax (train in camp). All the above are in England and Wales. In Scotland three regiments assemble on Monday:—Edinburgh Queen's Light Infantry, at Glencorse (train in camp); Fife Artillery, at Cupar (train at Dunbar Barracks); and the Forfar Artillery, at Montrose. In Ireland, ten regiments assemble on Monday:—West Cork Artillery, at Kinsale; Dublin County Light Infantry, at the Curragh; Royal Dublin City, at the Curragh; Galway, at Loughrea; Galway Artillery, at Galway; King's County Rifles, at Birr (train in camp); Longford Rifles, at Longford (train in camp); Queen's County Rifles, at Maryborough (train in camp); 1st or South Tipperary Artillery, at Duncannon Fort; North Tipperary Light Infantry, at Clonmel. Of the 23 regiments, it will be observed that a large proportion go into camp. Up to to-day, the number of regiments which have completed their training is 90, viz., 67 in England and Wales, three in Scotland, and 20 in Ireland. There will be an addition to this list of completed trainings on Tuesday next of the Monaghan and the Tyrone Fusiliers, which assembled on the 3rd inst.

We are requested to state that the literary examination of Militia subalterns for commissions in the Line will be held by the Civil Service Commissioners, at the London University, Burlington Gardens, on Friday, Oct. 8 next, and following days. Applications for permission to attend this examination must be made in accordance with the instructions contained in para. 10, Clause 21, Army Circular, 1880, and must reach the Military Secretary, Horse Guards, War Office, not later than Aug. 15 next.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Denbighshire Hussars. The regiment, under command of Lieut.-Col. T. Naylor Leyland (late 2nd Life Guards), assembled for the annual eight days' training at Denbigh on June 12, and was inspected by Col. the Hon. C. W. Thesiger, inspector of Auxiliary Cavalry, on the 17th and 18th inst. On the 17th, the inspecting officer minutely inspected each troop separately in the field, and on the following day the regiment, which is only seven privates below its maximum establishment, paraded in marching order for inspection. After the usual parade movements and sword-exercise had been performed, Col. Leyland, and subsequently Col. Thesiger, put the regiment through a series of field movements, at the conclusion of which the inspecting officer addressed the regiment, and expressed himself as being thoroughly satisfied with its general appearance and the smart manner in which the various movements and sword-exercise had been performed, and also with the great improvement which had taken place in the regiment since he last inspected it in June, 1878. The Denbigh troop, which was judged by the inspecting officer to be the best turned-out troop in the regiment, was awarded the badge, which is to be worn by each member of the troop for a year. In the competition for swordsmanship, mounted, Corpl. Richards, Llangollen troop, won the first prize, a cup, presented by Col. Leyland; Pte. White, Wrexham troop, taking the second prize, a cup presented by Major Barnes. Pte. Roberts, Serjt. D. Williams, and Pte. Conway, of the Denbigh troop, and Corpl. Richards, Llangollen troop, respectively won the prizes of £4, £3, £2, and £1, presented by Mrs. Leyland for the four men best turned out on the morning of the inspection. Corpl. Richards, Ptes. Edwards and Owen, A Troop; Corpl. Forrester, Ptes. White and Bithell, B Troop; Pte. Williams, Qrmr. Roberts, and Pte. Jones, C Troop; Serjt. Barker, Pte. Davis, and Corpl. Jones, D Troop; won the troop prizes for swordsmanship. In addition to the above prizes, Col. Leyland awarded prizes of £1 each to 50 men, selected from those who, having attended all the preliminary mounted drills, were recommended by the captains of troops as having been punctual, attentive, and well turned-out on every parade during the week. The annual regimental ball will take place at Ruthin in the winter.

Duke of Lancaster's Own. At his inspection of the regiment on Thursday, Col. the Hon. C. W. Thesiger complained of some of the members being absent without leave. They did not, he said, seem to appreciate the oaths they had taken, but were under the misapprehension that if they were volunteers they could do as they liked. He contrasted the "Duke's Own" in this respect with the Lancashire Hussars, not a man of which regiment absented himself.

The Pembroke completed its training last Thursday. The Ayrshire will be dismissed on Monday. There are now only seven regiments to assemble, out of the 39 The first training commenced on April 12, and the last regiment on the list meets on Sept. 23.

London Rifle Brigade. In accordance with their annual practice, the Brigade went into camp on Mitcham Common on the 17th inst., since which time there has been a large number of men under canvas, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Haywood. Each day there has been a drill at six in the morning, and another in the evening, while all the ordinary duties have been carried out thoroughly. The camp will be officially inspected to-day.

20th Middlesex Rifles. The annual inspection, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Gore Browne, took place on the Horse Guards Parade on Saturday last. The inspecting officer was Col. Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards. The regiment mustered 589 of all ranks. On reaching the parade, the men were formed up in column, and then most carefully inspected, company after company, by Col. Fremantle. After wheeling into line, Major Sir W. Charley put them through the manual, and the adjutant, Major Hotham, put them through the bayonet exercise. Col. Browne then put the regiment through various battalion movements. The regiment ultimately formed square, and Col. Fremantle expressed his entire and unqualified approval of what he had seen, mentioning the march-past, skirmishing, and bayonet exercise as being exceptionally good, and added that it would be his pleasing duty to make a most favourable report of the inspection. The regiment was formed into eight companies, under the command of Capts. Harty, Rice, Wickenden, Russel, Blackstone, Long, Whewell, and Robbins.

23rd Middlesex (Inns of Court) Rifles were officially inspected on Saturday last by Col. Gipps, Scots Guards, in the Temple Garden. The regiment mustered 362 of all ranks, and paraded in six companies under the command of Lieut.-Col. Bulwer, Q.C. After the usual salute, Col. Gipps made an inspection of the ranks, and the corps then marched past, this being followed by the manual and firing exercise under the senior major. At the termination of the inspection, Col. Gipps expressed his gratification at the work done, and said he should report favourably, 46th Middlesex paraded on Saturday on Hampstead Heath, 450 strong, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Routledge, and drilled in volley-firing by half-battalions, which was particularly well done; and other work, concluding with the attack. The regiment was entertained at supper by its most hospital, indefatigable, and deservedly popular commanding officer.

1st Surrey Rifles. The inspection took place on Saturday last, at head-quarters, Camberwell, when there was a muster of 340 of all ranks, in addition to about 100 cadets attached to Dulwich College. At the close of the ceremony, Lieut.-Col. Gardiner informed the regiment that Col. Sprot, who had inspected them, had expressed himself highly pleased with the drill and appearance of the battalion.

At a rough computation, something like 12,000 men will be under arms to-day in the Metropolis, the principal parades being called, as they usually are at this period of the season, for the annual Government inspections. On the parade-ground of Wellington Barracks, that fine brigade of artillery (3rd Middlesex), which gained such high praise at the field-day on Easter Monday, will be inspected by Col. Waller, R.A. The brigade will probably have 900 men on the ground. The St. George's (11th Middlesex), who have for the last three years been regaining lost ground, will pass the ordeal in the grounds of Lambeth Palace. The new adjutant (Capt. Bircham) has effected some striking reforms in this battalion, which is still as efficiently led as of yore by Lieut.-Col. the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, and we hope to see a turn-out of 600 men. The Queen's Westminster will have 800 men on parade, under Lieut.-Col. the Duke of Westminster, for inspection in Hyde Park; and the 37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) about 900 in the grounds of the Foundling Hospital, where it will be inspected by Col. Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards. All who have watched the career of the latter regiment for many years, but especially the last five, need hardly be assured that it will pass the inspection with extreme credit. It is a model battalion, the working of which might be copied with advantage by many in the country. On the Horse Guards parade the 2nd London, which last year had 740 men on parade and returned 962 efficients, will be inspected, but cannot have the fine muster (920) of its sister-regiment on Saturday week. The Central London Rangers (40th Middlesex), which is also inspected this evening on the parade-ground of the Albany-street Barracks, is one of the few regiments which does its work without undue show and ostentation, though for efficiency, numbers, and soldierly bearing it need not fear comparison with any other regiment in Middlesex. While leading in the general accession of numbers to its ranks, a noticeable feature is that there are no under-sized or ill-formed boys in the ranks of the 40th, a point on which we think inspecting officers might, with advantage to the Service, be more particular; while it has an experienced soldier at its head in the person of Lieut.-Col. Malet, who was for close on 20 years in the Grenadier Guards, with which he was present in the Crimea. In the Regent's Park the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade will be inspected, and many other regiments will be engaged in other work.

D. A. N.—Apply to "Army Medical Department, Scotland Yard," by letter, and you will receive full particulars as to entrance, pay, quarters, and the cost of uniform, &c.

H.—We cannot insert your letter. Entertainments of the kind are private, and are not regulated by "Service" rules. If the Colonel exacts more than is his right, in consideration of his position, the other officers can make a fitting representation.

A.—Can be ascertained at any outfitter's, or at the Army and Navy Co-operative Stores, 117 Victoria Street, S.W. Of course, he must belong to the mess.

A COLONEL.—You will notice, by the Gazette of Tuesday last, that all necessity for the publication of your letter has now passed.

H.—The abolition of the seniority brevet would entail so much personal hardship upon individuals, that the suspension of the Warrant is bound to be sanctioned. Already there are cries on all sides of supersession, and the Linesmen are the injured ones in all instances. By doing away with these promotions by seniority, their position would be rendered even worse than it is now. The members of the Royal Commission saw this, and would not recommend the discontinuance of the brevet, and the fact of their having decided against the system cannot fail to carry weight, when the matter again comes forward for consideration, as it must do shortly.

SENIORITY BREVET.—The paras. stand thus:—Sec. D, para. 20—"A qualified major shall be eligible for promotion to lieutenant-colonel. (f) By brevet, if senior in the Army rank of major, in succession to a vacancy on the establishment of General officers, provided such vacancy occur before the 1st October, 1880." Sec. C, para. 18—"A qualified captain shall be eligible for promotion to the rank of major after six years' service in our Army. (d) By Brevet, in succession to a major promoted under Art. 20 (f), if senior in the Army rank of captain, and if on full pay, or in any position in which his service is recognised as full-pay service." Surely this is plain language enough. If promotion is stopped for majors, it must be stopped for captains also.

IN a letter to the Times, which published this day week an extract from Sir Garnet Wolseley's second report to the Secretary of State for War on the answers sent to him by the landdrosts and magistrates of the Transvaal and Natal, respecting the conduct of the troops, Mr. W. H. Russell has announced his intention of laying before the War Office statements which he says will, in his opinion, justify the bulk of the allegations he made in his letter to the Daily Telegraph concerning the indiscipline of some of the soldiery in South Africa. The letter was written on October 10, and seems to have been a long time in reaching the Daily Telegraph, for it did not appear, we think, till November 20, and it was not till the last days of December, 1879, or the first days of January of the present year, that Sir Garnet Wolseley directed Colonel Brackenbury to draw up a form in which questions based on the several allegations were addressed to the landdrosts and magistrates confining their answers to the period between July 1 and October 10, 1879. It may be remembered that the authorities of the Horse Guards called Sir Garnet Wolseley's attention to the letter in which these allegations were published, and that his Excellency at once telegraphed a denial of all of them in terms of the most forcible description. The writer was "the victim of a hoax," and the statements were "gross exaggerations and transparent untruths." The Adjutant-General, by order of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, requested that the telegram of Sir Garnet Wolseley to be published by the Daily Telegraph, in compliance with his Excellency's desire, but the despatch in which his Excellency forwarded the report of the landdrosts of the Transvaal, and in which he commented on Mr. Russell's statements, was addressed to the Secretary of State for War, and not to the Adjutant-General. On a question from Sir W. Barttelot, the then Secretary of State for War promised to produce the despatch and report, which were duly presented to the House of Commons and printed among the Parliamentary papers. Mr. Russell's reply to the despatch, and his observations on the nature of the inquiry originated by the General-in-Command in South Africa, was addressed to the Daily Telegraph, and although it was largely noticed in the Press, it did not obtain the advantages which were secured for the despatch and report by their publication as a Parliamentary paper. A second despatch written by Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Secretary of State for War on March 27, accompanied by a report from the magistrates of Natal, was laid on the table of the House of Commons last week, and it is with reference to that report, and to the comments of his Excellency upon his letters and statements, that Mr. Russell has written to the leading journal to intimate that he intends to address the Secretary of State for War, who may, if he pleases, lay the paper before Parliament. The main question to be settled is whether indiscipline existed, and to what extent it prevailed, among the troops; and whether the officers, placed in circumstances of great difficulty, were empowered and able to deal with it properly. No one can doubt that the regimental officers would do their duty if they could, and that they desired to preserve order and to protect the civil population. In the face of recent legislation, and of further steps in the same direction, the means of punishing crime and maintaining discipline among troops, constituted as our Army is at present, became of paramount importance, especially when soldiers are quartered in parts of her Majesty's dominions where there is no adequate police force or competent civilian organisation.

As an officer, if not as a gentleman, Major O'Beirne would do much better to leave the question of which he has given notice, unasked. He intends on Monday night to ask the Secretary of State for War if he would explain why the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces has been exempt from the rule limiting the tenure of Staff appointments to a period of five years, in view of the fact that his appointment as a General officer on the Staff of the Army dates from July 15, 1856. The Duke of Cambridge is not "the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces." His Royal Highness is "Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief," under the terms of "a letter of service." The motive of this question is plain enough.

As we intimated some time ago was probable, the difficulties which stood in the way of the appointment of Colonel Godfrey Clerk, Rifle Brigade, as Adjutant-General of the Madras Army have been removed, and Colonel Clerk will shortly leave for India, to enter upon the performance of duties for the discharge of which he has undoubted qualifications on all professional grounds.

A Departmental Committee has assembled at the War Office, under the presidency of Lord Morley, to inquire into the condition of the Scientific Corps.

Our Aldershot correspondent writes:—"It is to be hoped the intelligent foreigner was not present at a recent field-day at this station, when, at a crisis in the operations, an Artillery gun-carriage became disabled, and no span-wheel being discoverable in any direction, had to be left in a helpless condition for several hours.

In evidence of the injustice which the Line officers are suffering, owing to their supersession by the First Captains of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, we could point to one station in the Mediterranean, where, out of ten majors of the Ordnance Corps, nine were junior as captains to the five senior captains of the last Line regiments which had arrived there. By abolishing the brevet now given to the senior captains of the Army, complaints would become general. Indeed, at such a serious disadvantage would the Linesmen be serving, that the Clause in the Royal Warrant must be expunged, for no Secretary of State for War could possibly sanction the carrying-out of an arrangement which would result in great hardship and universal discontent.

Colonel W. J. Williams, C.B., succeeds to the vacant regimental colonelcy in A Brigade, R.H.A. This officer has been noted for home employment, and it is probable will receive a command before the end of the year.

The War Office having decided to form an artillery station at St. John's Wood, A Battery A Brigade has moved there during the week from Aldershot, having been for some time under orders.

Colonel Gordon has received six months' leave of absence to travel in China. This very proper exercise of the power of the authority was made in reference to the resignation of his commission, which Colonel Gordon tendered on being refused leave to proceed from India to the Celestial Empire.

It is not quite certain, we hear, whether Colonel Napier Sturt will carry out his expressed intention of retiring from the Guards.

The detention of Lord Lytton in India is mainly due to a consideration of the risk which would be incurred by his young children in a journey across country, in the very hottest time of the year. Hence the unusual appearance of two Kings of Brentford,—or of the sun and moon together in the Hindoo empyrean.

Sir D. Lysons will probably begin his term of command at Aldershot with a stiff field-day or two, and then work down gradually to healthy regular exercise and "exercises."

We hear that it is very likely the opinion of military and Indian experts in favour of retaining supremacy and control at Candahar in some form or other, will prevail with the Government. The position of affairs in Afghanistan may be "reassuring," but it is quite certain that we shall "drop it like a hot potato," as soon as we can.

We are glad to learn that the senior Assistant-Commissaries-General of the Ordnance Store Department, who were deprived of promotion to Deputy-Commissary-General, to which they had been looking forward, by the operations of the new Warrant, are being granted the highest rate of retirement it is in the power of the War Office to offer them, viz., £599 per annum—£1 less than they would have been entitled to had they attained the higher rank. This liberality in the treatment of old and most deserving officers will meet with the approval of both the Service and the public.

Somebody has made a wonderful discovery, viz., that officers on full pay of regiments employed on the personal staff of Civil Governors of Colonies need not be seconded under the terms of the present Royal Warrant, and so it has been decided to restore all officers so employed to the establishment of their regiments. A meaner way of saving money has never been devised. The effect will be to throw all the trouble and expense of a company upon a number of unfortunate subalterns, who are at the same time denied the rank which should accompany that command, in order that a few pounds may be saved to the Exchequer. The regiments affected by this ruling at the present time are the 13th, 26th, 35th, 57th, and 91st, all of which have lately been deprived of a step of promotion which would otherwise have passed to them.

The nomination of Sir Garnet Wolseley to the G.C.B. was according to modern usage. He is now the only lieutenant-general on the establishment with that honour. Among the Generals, there are twelve or thirteen; in the rank of major-general, there are but two, one of whom is Lord Chelmsford. There was some idea that Sir Garnet Wolseley would be confirmed in the rank of General, which he had in South Africa, but that is apparently deferred for the present. He got nothing, we believe, for his services in the Quartermaster-General's Department, under Sir Hope Grant, in China. It may be said that as Lord Chelmsford's local rank was not confirmed, it could not be expected that Sir Garnet Wolseley should receive such a mark of favour; but independently of the consideration connected with the previous, and indeed recent, services of each, we do not think there is a parallel between the two cases. There can be no doubt that the prestige of the British power in South Africa received a blow at Islandwana, Zlobane, and the Intombi, which the victory at Ulundi did not cure, nor the sight of Cetewayo in chains and the Zulus prostrate compensate. The great delay which occurred between the first and second invasion of Zululand, the fact that a British column was shut up so long in Ekshowe, and the very preparations which were made to meet our barbarous antagonists in the field, created the impression that our power was subjected to a severe strain, and much encouraged the hopes of our enemies in the various dependencies. The Boers were elated at the prospect of regaining their independence, and the native Chiefs everywhere regarded with the most intense interest the mode and end of Sir Garnet Wolseley's dealing with Sekukuni, hitherto the unconquered and defiant master of the Lulu Mountain, in the heart of the Transvaal. In obedience to instructions from home, Sir Garnet Wolseley had, with perhaps too much alacrity, reduced the strength of the British force in South Africa to a point which many thought dangerous; but the result proved that his judgment was sound, and that he had quite enough for his work. The instant he had settled the political affairs of Zululand, and had hunted down Cetewayo, he addressed himself to the Transvaal difficulty—Dutch and Kafir. As to the former, whatever may be the outcome, it is enough to say that the Boers were everywhere encountered by the sight of a British camp, and that not a shot was fired in anger, nor any resistance attempted to the assertion of the Queen's supremacy, while Sir Garnet Wolseley was in the Transvaal. As to Sekukuni, it would seem as if it were necessary to point out that no neater, cheaper, or more skilful operation was ever effected by a British General than the march on the Lulu Mountain, and the attack and storming of the position which had resisted two Boer commanders and the efforts of a column of British troops commanded by an officer of approved reputation. The climate, the time of year, the distance, the rivers, the transport, each and all presented obstacles to the enterprise; but with a happy combination of caution in preparation and of daring in execution, it was conducted with the most perfect success. The result so far has been that no Kafir chief, from the sea to the Zambesi, dares to question our power or to disturb the peace. It is a result which deserves recognition.

The stations of the Cavalry regiments in Great Britain for the winter will most probably be as follows:—3rd Dragoon Guards (if brought over from Ireland), Manchester; 5th Dragoon Guards, Brighton; 7th Dragoon Guards, Aldershot; 3rd Hussars, Colchester; 4th Hussars, Aldershot; 5th Lancers, York; 6th Dragoons, Norwich; 11th Hussars, Hounslow; 15th Hussars, Shorncliffe (on arrival from India); 16th Lancers, Woolwich; 18th Hussars, Leeds; 21st Hussars, Edinburgh.

General Garfield, the possible President of the United States, was in early life a boatman, a carpenter, a very poor, hard-working boy; but he became a scholar and a soldier, and he is in tastes, manners, and appearance a perfect gentleman. He was a school tutor, then a schoolmaster, and when the great war of 1861 broke out, he volunteered for the field, and—hey, presto!—the student-boatman was a colonel! But, wonderful to say, he won credit—and battles—in his new calling, and was selected as Chief of the Staff to General Rosencrantz in Western Virginia. A man of rare natural ability and great parts, he moved ever upwards and onwards in the House of Representatives, edited newspapers, and acquired a high reputation as a writer and speaker on financial subjects. The Staff College or the highest class of advanced students at Woolwich could not turn out a more accomplished man. General Hancock, the Democrat candidate, is a soldier by profession, and a very good one too.

A difficulty has arisen with regard to the promotion of Veterinary-Surgeon B. L. Glover, R.A., for active service at the Cape. This officer, as we lately announced, was strongly recommended to the notice of the War Office for the rank of First-class Veterinary-Surgeon, in recognition of the zeal and ability he displayed throughout the recent operations. It is held, however, that by the terms of the present Warrant, no latitude is extended to the military authorities to grant special promotion in the case of an officer who has not completed the given limit of twelve years' service. It will be seen from this how well justified the complaints are of the members of the Army Veterinary Department of a want of encouragement.

The pious pilgrimage of the Empress Eugénie has, it seems, stirred the Natalians to erect a monument to the gallant and unfortunate Prince in whom ended the hopes of a dynasty, and subscriptions are solicited for the purpose.

A Lieutenant-General of distinguished service writes:—"A large number of the old officers of the Army are highly pleased with the excellent leading article in the Army and Navy Gazette of June 19. It touched the matter of short service with a point—tetigit acu—and is a complete answer to those who profess partiality for an Army of boys, instead of seasoned soldiers, and non-commissioned officers—the backbone of the troops—of ten years' service. A sufficient Reserve could be secured, if enlistments were for ten years. Weed the men at the end of that time, and encourage good and sound soldiers to continue for ten or eleven years more, a pension in prospect, and the country would be well served; the men would consider their regiment their home, and esprit de corps would be promoted, as it cannot be with the present shifting system."

The sum allowed for her repair is £13,741, and the work is expected to be completed about October next.

It is intended to still further provide against accidents during rapid-gun practice by a contrivance which will prevent the gun being run in for reloading until it has recoiled about 18 inches. Should the arrangement answer when subjected to experiment, it will be fitted to all ships provided with automatic loading gear.

Merlin. Lieut R. H. Paul, who is appointed to the command of this vessel, served as sub-lieutenant in the Defence with the Channel Squadron from March, 1865, until promoted to the rank of lieutenant, April 21, 1866. On Aug. 1 following he was appointed to the Cruiser, Com. Morgan Singer, fitting for the Mediterranean, and in her left Spithead, on the 27th of the same month. She afterwards visited Gibraltar, Port Mahon, and Beyrout, and in February, 1867, left the latter place to visit the northern ports of Syria. She returned to Malta June 16, and on July 23 left again for a cruise. The cruiser shortly afterwards had a narrow escape of being wrecked. It appears she left Spezzia on the morning of Oct. 7, but on the following night the Admiral received a telegraphic communication that she was in distress in the neighbourhood of Massa. She encountered a very heavy gale from the south-west, and was driven on to a lee shore near Avenza, where she anchored. Her cable parted during the night, but the second anchor, which she let go close to the beach, fortunately held her. The seas broke clean over her, putting her fires out, and she was for some hours in great peril, but she did not touch the ground. She lost several sails, as well as an anchor and cable. In Feb. 1868, she was at Alexandria, and after next visiting the coast of Syria, Malta, Corfu, Ayas, and Rhodes, returned to Malta, June 6, 1869. Com. William Swinburne was, on the 1st of the month last named, appointed to succeed Capt. Singer, and in her visited Palermo, Naples, Leghorn, Port Mahon, Gibraltar, and Cadiz. Com. George G. Duff was appointed to succeed Com. Swinburne on Sept. 28, 1869, and on Nov. 29 the Cruiser again left Cadiz for a cruise, but returned in the following month. In Feb. 1870, she was at Malaga, and on leaving there on March 29 got on shore at the Point, but was floated off without having sustained any injury. Lieut. Paul returned in her to England, and was paid off at the close of 1870. On June 1, 1871, he was appointed to the Glasgow, Capt. T. M. Jones, for passage to the East Indies, and on Oct. 7 removed in the Dryad, Com. George Parsons, at Bombay, and returned in her to England, and was paid off in May 1872. On Jan. 9, 1873, he was appointed to the St. Vincent, Com. Henry Hand, and in Aug. 1873 was transferred to the Thalia, Capt. H. B. Woollcombe, at China, where on Nov. 22 following he obtained command of the Mosquito, gunboat, and commanded her until Sept. 18, 1877. It was the misfortune of Lieut. Paul, when in command of the Mosquito (as we remarked in November, 1877), to meet with a Capt. Lyell, of Chefoo, and the fact of making his acquaintance under somewhat awkward circumstances put Lieut. Paul to the expense of fully £100. "Not having before us the whole of the evidence upon which an intelligent jury at Hong Kong arrived at the conclusion that the officer in command of the Mosquito was in the wrong, we cannot take upon ourselves to declare he was in the right. But we have a strong suspicion that Capt. Lyell must have grossly interfered with the salvage duties on which the Mosquito was engaged, before such stringent measures as removing the Chefoo captain from the wreck and taking him on board the Mosquito would have been decided upon by Lieut. Paul. When Capt. Lyell arrived on board her Majesty's ship, he would have appeared to have acted with unreasonable temper, and with ways as peculiar as those of the 'heathen Chinee;' and though we can sympathise with a person who is interrupted in the interesting operation of salving, we cannot understand why he should have desired to throw Assist.-Paymr. Jennings overboard. For expressing this wish to so suddenly terminate the career of Mr. Jennings, and for impeding Lieut. Paul in his efforts to save the cargo of the wreck, Capt. Lyell was taken before the Consul, and was straightway fined £55. But the Chefoo captain was not to be snuffed out in that manner, and failing to get the satisfaction he desired in his own place, he moved the scene of the trial to Hong Kong, false imprisonment being the charge. He valued his liberty for that short time at 2,000 taels, but he has been awarded 300. This is the reverse of pleasant for Lieut. Paul, especially as he has now gone on half-pay, on being relieved of his command at the expiration of his term of service, and we hope the fact of his having won the day in the consular court may be taken as proof that he only acted for the best, but 'caught a Tartar.'" He subsequently studied for some time at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich.

Neptune. The hydraulic loading-gear underwent a preliminary trial at Portsmouth on Friday, and everything is now completed for the firing trials at sea, the date for which has not been yet fixed. Besides the new indicators, the guns are to be tested after each round.

Raleigh, Capt. C. T. Jago. The Secretary to the Admiralty informs us that a telegram has been received from Comdre. Wilson, at Sydney, New South Wales, dated June 19, stating that the Raleigh had arrived, but that no shipwrecked people were found at Amsterdam.

Seagull. Com. Mather Byles, who is appointed to command this ship, vice Heron, invalided, entered the Navy in March, 1854, and previous to his promotion to lieutenant, May 22, 1861, served in the Firebrand, 6, Com. J. M. Bruce, on the North-America and West-India station, when he was appointed additional for disposal to the Nile, 90, Capt. E. H. Barnard, flagship of Sir Alexander Milne, K.C.B., on the same station, and remained until the close of 1861. On Aug. 20, 1862, he was appointed to the Excellent, Capt. R. S. Hewlett, C.B., and remained until the spring of 1863. He served in the Gibraltar, 81, Capts. J. E. Prevost and Robert Coote, in the Mediterranean, from Sept. 11, 1863, until paid off, Jan. 12, 1867; and again served in the Excellent from March 26, 1867, until Aug. 1 following, when he was transferred to the Lord Warden, 20, Capt. W. R. Rolland, fitting for the Mediterranean; and on June 12, 1868, was appointed to the Hibernia, flagship at Malta, for gunnery duties, from which ship, on Nov. 28, 1870, he was again appointed to the Lord Warden, 18, for special gunnery duties, and was promoted to commander Feb. 13, 1873. He was second captain in the Devastation from Feb. 10, 1874, until the close of that year; and from Aug. 20, 1875, until Oct. 2, 1877, he served successively in the Aboukir and Urgent at Jamaica. He has commanded the Durham, 17, drill-ship for the Royal Naval Reserve, at Sunderland, since April 12, 1878.

Superb. The alterations to the engines, rendered necessary by the discovery of defects at the trial trip, are now approaching completion, and the authorities hope she will be ready for sea before long. Since the purchase of this vessel from the Turkish Government, she has undergone some very extensive alterations, in order to increase her stability and enable her to carry heavier guns than she was originally built for.

Torch, Com. W. C. H. Selby, left Malta on Wednesday, June 16, to join the fleet at Naples, her previous orders for Athens having been cancelled.

Tyne, Com. J. E. Stokes, having undergone a series of repairs at Chatham Dockyard, was last week taken out of the repairing basin. She afterwards proceeded to Woolwich, where she will take on board a quantity of stores for Zanzibar and other naval stations on that coast.

Valiant. Capt. W. C. Chapman, who has commanded this ship since Jan. 1, 1878, and who has been awarded a good-service pension, entered the Navy in 1841, and served as mate in the Caledonia, under the flag of Rear-Admiral Sir John Louis, Bart., at Devonport, from Dec. 8, 1847, until promoted to lieutenant, Nov. 1848, when he was appointed additional of the Asia, 84, Capt. Robert F. Stopford, flagship in the Pacific of Rear-Admiral Phipps Hornby, C.B., and returned in her to England, and was paid off in 1851. On June 29, 1852, he was appointed to the Trincomalee, 24, Capt. Wallace Houstoun, fitting for the Pacific, and remained until 1856. On April 8, 1858, he was appointed to the command of the Spitfire, 5, paddle vessel, on the West Coast of Africa, and was promoted to commander June 17, 1859. He was inspecting commander in the Coastguard Service at Fleetwood from Jan. 10, 1861, until April 22, 1862, when he was appointed to the command of the Ariel, 9, sloop, at the Cape of Good Hope, and brought her to England and paid her off at the close of 1864. He commanded the Winchester, 12, drill-ship for the Royal Naval Reserve at Aberdeen from May 4, 1865, until posted, April 11, 1866. His next appointment was on April 20, 1871, to the command of the Dido, 8, fitting for the Cape of Good Hope and the West Coast of Africa. After visiting Sierra Leone, Accra, Lagos, Fernando Po, Kabenda, Congo, Loanda, Cape Coast Castle, Jellah Coffee, Bonny, &c., in August 3, 1872, she was at Sydney, and afterwards visited the Fiji Islands, for the purpose of settling disputes between certain planters, who refused to recognise the government de facto. She returned to Sydney at the close of 1873, and soon afterwards went to the assistance of the French man-of-war (l'Hermite), which had been totally wrecked on the rocks at Wallis Island. She was at Levuka in July, 1874, at Kandavu in August, and at the close of the year returned to Sydney, with King Cocobau and his two sons on board, from the Fiji Islands. On the melancholy death of Comdre. Goodenough, Capt. Chapman assumed command as commodore pro tem., and the Dido afterwards visited Hobart Town, Sydney, Melbourne, &c., sailed for England in January, 1876, with the old crews of the Renard, Beagle, and Sandfly, and was paid off in May following. This ship left Plymouth Sound on Saturday for the River Shannon, to embark fleet-men, after which she joins the Reserve Squadron at Portland.

Vestal, Com. Dashwood G. Tandy, arrived at Malta on June 5 from China, on her way to England to pay-off, and left on Saturday, June 12, for Spithead, calling at Gibraltar. Notice is given to the officers, seamen, and marines, and to all persons interested therein, that the distribution of the slave and tonnage bounties awarded for 18 slaves and the slave-dhow Mahoulli, captured on Nov. 26 and Dec. 6, 1878, by this ship, will commence on Tuesday, the 29th inst., in the Prize Branch of the Department of the "Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, New Street, Spring Gardens, S.W." NAVAL PROMOTION.

A most interesting paper was read at the Royal United Service Institution yesterday by Mr. J. K. Laughton, M.A., mathematical instructor and lecturer in Naval History at the Royal Naval College, on "Naval Promotion, Arithmetically and Historically Considered." As the lecturer justly remarked,—"The interest which attaches to the subject of Naval promotion is by no means personal, or even technical; it belongs equally to every one who has the good of his country at heart; for it directly affects the well-being of that Service which has been pronounced in repeated Acts of Parliament, 'the wall and fence of the kingdom.' It is on our officers as much as on our men that the strength of the Navy depends; and their increased efficiency is of at least as much national importance as an extra inch or two of iron on the sides of our ships, or a few additional foot-tons to the striking energy of our shot." Mr. Laughton is no believer in the several schemes which have been adopted in times past to create a steady flow of promotion. In his opinion, retirement schemes are a fallacy, and have all failed in their object, as a necessary consequence of the system adopted, for he says:—"If at any time old officers are all retired, and the lists filled up to their complement with young, or comparatively young, men, it ought to be needless to point out that nothing but 'a bloody war, or a sickly season,' can have much effect on these lists for many a long day. And meantime, promotion in the junior lists stagnates. The lieutenants run on to 14 or 15 years, and the sub-lieutenants to five or six. This stagnation is peculiarly a grievance of the present time, and I believe I am right in attributing it to a reaction from the extensive retirement of seven years ago. By-and-by there must, in the course of nature, come a time when the promotion will quicken itself, which will, again, be followed by a period of stagnation. Now, this stagnation, as I understand it, is a very disheartening thing. As the years pass over an officer's head, there seems to be no escape from it. According to the system of promotion, virtually by seniority, which has continually gained ground, and which, in the absence of distinguished service, is probably the best that can be devised; according to the system of retirement which has been adopted with such general approval, I must say that, for myself, I see no help for it. If a lieutenant, of, say, 23, has to wait for his promotion till a captain of 40 retires at 55, or an admiral of, say, 50, grows old and retires at 65, it does not need an accountant to tell you that he will be 38 before he is made a commander. This is the present, and peculiarly the present view of the case. But there is another which inherently belongs to it, and has belonged to it for the last 80 or 90 years, and that is, that the number of lieutenants so far exceeds that of commanders or captains, that from the very nature of numbers, there is no present or future possibility of promotion for a very great many of them—just at present for seven out of every nine; and in past years for a still greater proportion." The gist of Mr. Laughton's remarks was that he would suggest the necessity of doing away with the entry of children as Naval cadets. "I believe," said the lecturer, "that young officers, passed into the active Service at the age of 18, might have their capabilities tested by a real and severe competitive examination; and at the age of two or three and twenty, might be subjected to such further examination as was found advisable. But it is needless for me to go into detail on this point. Our chairman, with a wider experience and more practical knowledge than mine, has already—six years ago—enunciated proposals which would serve admirably as the basis of any future discussion. It is enough, then, to say that I believe, by some such course, a body of officers trained to the very highest pitch could be got together; and I do not see that others, who failed of the required high standard, would—entering with a clear knowledge of the conditions—have any further claim on the country. They can continue to be in the Service; but except under special and peculiar circumstances, are out of the line of promotion. I think that of lieutenants so trained and qualified, from whom alone, under ordinary circumstances, all staff appointments are to be made—who alone are in the line of promotion—the number might be fixed comparatively low, three or four or five hundred; probably the smaller number would be sufficient; and that this number might be supplemented to any necessary extent by those officers who had fallen short of the high standard for the staff, and still more, I think, by officers from the Merchant Service, who, under such conditions as might be decided on, would serve for a commission as sub-lieutenants or lieutenants. Their doing so would give them wider experience in the command of men than they can possibly get on board merchant ships, and would, therefore, render the men efficient as officers of the mercantile marine; and on the other hand, their experience of the discipline and training of the Royal Navy would render them in fact, as in name, a Royal Naval Reserve. Now, I can see two objections which may be made to this. Firstly, that officers so introduced for temporary service would fall short of that high scientific standard that is now an essential. I read continually in the papers that it is necessary for Naval officers to know as much mathematics and physical science as a Wrangler from Cambridge. This, of course, is utter rubbish, and I am glad to be sure that it is so, otherwise I should have to say that our Navy is in a very bad state, for I have the best possible means of knowing that few indeed of our Naval officers have any knowledge of mathematics worth speaking of. I could wish that of these there were more. There are, no doubt, many questions of nautical science, which cannot be resolved without a fair knowledge of mathematics; and we must have amongst our officers a sufficient number of men equal to grappling with these, whenever and wherever they occur. But on the other hand, I can conceive the possibility of a lieutenant keeping his watch, drilling his quarters, mustering his division, and doing all the duties of an ordinary lieutenant, without more mathematics than the multiplication table. Secondly, I can conceive it being objected that the standard of seamanship is lower in the Merchant Service than in the Navy. I am not qualified to pronounce on this point; but I have heard it stated the other way; and I should like to ask the captain of such a ship as, say, the Northumberland, or the Alexandra, or any other large ironclad, whether he would sleep more quietly through the middle watch, on a wild dark night, if the deck was in charge of a young lieutenant, fresh from the gun-room and Greenwich, with all the glories of three ones: or of a lieutenant of what we now call the Reserve, with five or ten years' experience as a watch-keeping officer on board a Cunard or Peninsular and Oriental steamer. And independent of this, the Admiralty has recognised the capability of these officers, by commissioning a number of them as sub-lieutenants and lieutenants of the Reserve; by appointing several of them to the ships of the Reserve squadron for a cruise—as was done eight or ten years ago; and by acknowledging them as a stand-by in case of war. If they are fit to officer our ships in time of war, they are equally so, to a smaller extent, in time of peace; and any such objection falls to the ground. On the other hand, the suggestion seems to me to offer many advantages. It would—to begin with—prevent the block continually recurring in the Lists of the Royal Navy: it would improve the efficiency of the Reserve: it would be a commercial gain, by improving the efficiency of officers of merchant ships; and it would be a national gain, by bringing the whole seafaring interest of the country more into unison with the Navy, and doing away with much of that jealousy which cannot but be a source of weakness. It used to be our boast that we were strongest at sea, because we had more sailors than any other country; as our Navy is at present constituted, this great source of national strength is put altogether on one side. In conclusion, then, I would suggest as a possible remedy for many of the difficulties which the state of the Navy List now presents:—1. The establishment of a highly-trained body of officers, who should occupy efficiently the place inefficiently occupied in former days by those favoured by birth or interest. 2. The recurrence to the system of permitting and encouraging officers of the mercantile marine to enter, as sub-lieutenants or lieutenants, for temporary service on board her Majesty's ships. Such a scheme may no doubt seem to many wild, Utopian, retrograde. To me, it is one which the facts of our past history suggest; the facts of promotion unduly paid, and the evils which attended it; the facts of the advantageous employ ment of officers from the Merchant Service. It is as such, a suggestion of a possible solution to a very serious and important problem, that I now put it before you."

The bombardment of Callao on May 9 by the Chilian fleet, and the proceedings of the contending armies, are thus summed up by the Anglo-Brazilian Times of May 31:—"The Huascar opened the bombardment, at 5,000 metres from the Darsena, with her 40-pounders, not being able to elevate her turret guns sufficiently. The other vessels fired at distances of 4,000 to 7,000 metres. When about 2,000 metres off, the Huascar admitted water into her double bottom, lowering her deck to two feet from the water, and opened with her turret guns. Being the nearest most of the fire from the castles and batteries was directed on her, but only three shots took effect, causing some damage to her hull. The other Chilian vessels escaped injury. In all, the Chilians fired 416 shots, some 300 of which they say fell into the Darsena. The Huascar and the Pilcomayo occupied themselves principally with the Peruvian corvette Union, whose cabin is said to have been set on fire. The Limena sent off a boat to aid, but it was sunk by a shell from the Huascar. Another ball from the Huascar sank the brigantine Sansey Pecke, and another did some damage to the barque Helena. The transport Aroya is also reported damaged. The O'Higgins fired from off the Miraflores upon the south batteries and reports killing six men. In all, the Peruvian loss in killed and wounded is given at only about forty men, the civilian inhabitants of Callao having withdrawn. Two torpedoes were discharged from the shore, but were exploded by the fire of the Nordenfeldt mitrailleuses of the Amazonas. One exploded 5,000 metres from land and the other on the Isla beach, causing a great commotion in the waters. After the bombardment the O'Higgins returned to the blockade of Ancon. Col. Sotomayor, the Chilian Minister of War, in charge of the campaigning, died of apoplexy on the 20th, at Buena Vista, the head-quarters of the Chilian army, preparing for the attack on Tacna and Arica. By telegrams viâ Buenos Ayres and Valparaiso we learn that the Chilians, after a stubborn fight, took the allied position in front of Tacna, capturing eight cannon and a number of prisoners, among whom was the wounded General Campero, President of Bolivia, and commanding the allies. After the engagement the Chilians set out rapidly for Arica to prevent the junction of the beaten force with that encamped close to Arica, under Montero. The battle must have occurred about the 24th." "According to news received from Rio Janeiro," writes the Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, "a secret treaty, offensive and defensive, has been concluded between Costa Rica and Peru, the dispositions of which refer to the transport of Peruvian munitions of war across the Isthmus of Panama. The Ministers of Great Britain and Italy have, it is stated, made demands on the government of Chili with respect to the private property of their respective subjects destroyed in the bombardment of Pisagua, and otherwise contrary to the rights of nations. The representatives of France and Germany at Santiago will, it is expected, join in these protests."

SIR,—The new Board of Admiralty has made an auspicious beginning in the administration of Naval affairs, in supplying to captains of ships a convenient channel for informing their Lordships of the general character, ability, and professional knowledge of their respective officers. The advent of this return, to be slightly paradoxical, will be hailed by the officers and captains of the Fleet with an almost universal satisfaction. There has long existed in the Service a touching desire to become better acquainted with those whose fortune it is to rule it, and the fatherly kindness with which the Admiralty has responded to that feeling is one well worthy of admiration. Their example might be followed in other public Services to their great advantage, and to the peculiar satisfaction of those therein employed. There is a delightful and refreshing simplicity in the manner in which the questions concerning the character and peculiarities of the officers are approached; not only are their mental and temperamental individualities examined into and reported upon, but the physical aspect, bearing, voice, &c., are likewise made the subject of comment. The task of filling up the various columns of this report, which sums up the officer, not only with respect to his profession, but also as regards all the little weaknesses and infirmities of private life, will be undertaken by the captain of the ship in which the officer is serving, and will doubtless prove an eminently agreeable addition to his duties, being calculated to draw closer that bond of union which already so notoriously exists between the captain and officers of certain of her Majesty's ships. To dwell upon the skill and judgment with which this report has been drawn out in all its details would perhaps be a superfluous task, yet I cannot refrain from pointing out one of its chief excellencies. It will be noticed that all officers, non-executive as well as executive, are equally to be reported on. How exquisitely fitted the captain of a man-of-war may be to report upon the professional qualifications of the surgeon or chief engineer, and with what degree of propriety he may do so, is best left to the judgment of those who know how thoroughly acquainted he must be with the particulars of their work. There is something truly and touchingly paternal in the means which it hath seemed best to their Lordships' wisdom to adopt for the better securing of their object; the complete absence of any species of concealment in the estimate of character and temper must be indeed gratifying to those chiefly concerned. No longer will their lights languish under a bushel. And he who would cavil at the exposure of little foibles and eccentricities to the unsympathetic gaze of perfect strangers, should incur and would richly deserve the contempt and dislike of all right-thinking men for his squeamish and ridiculous scruples. It is somewhat presumptuous to attempt with a profane hand the task of perfecting the work of such august wisdom. Nevertheless, with the greatest diffidence, and with a humiliating sense of my own unworthiness, I would suggest one or two additions and improvements,—such, at least, they appear to me. To attain a more minute and real conception of the officers, there should be transmitted, with the return, photographs (coloured or otherwise), representing them in the performance of their several duties. For example, No. 1. Lieut. So-and-So reefing topsails in a gale of wind; No. 2, Lieut. So-and-So drilling a battery of guns (taken in the act of giving the command to fire); No. 3, Lieut. So-and-So making noon at sea; No. 4, Dr. So-and-So giving a dose of physic to a boy, &c. The officers would, of course, be specially cautioned against striking any attitudes for the occasion, as such a course would naturally tend to defeat the object in view. One or two of the inquiries bearing upon an officer's conduct on shore it might be deemed advisable to add to the above a photograph of the person in question in plain-clothes, such as Mr. This going ashore to his club, in a frock-coat and tall hat! Mr. That, in a shooting-coat and wide-awake hat, out quail-shooting, &c. It is very generally admitted that criticism, proceeding from those standing outside a profession and therefore unaffected by local colouring, possesses, on that account, a peculiar value. It would therefore seem that a system of minor reports might, with advantage, be instituted, and in which I would propose that each officer should report upon those of different branches in the inverse ratio of the knowledge he has of their business, thus securing the inestimable advantages arising from a broad and independent review. What, for instance, could be more edifying than an estimate, by the paymaster, of an executive officer's professional knowledge and ability? What of greater value than an executive officer's comments upon the paymaster's method of keeping accounts and of paying money, upon the epistolary style of his Service letters? But space and time forbid my multiplying examples, indeed, they remind me that, in all probability, I am encroaching, Sir, upon yours; as this is but too likely to be the case, permit me at once to write myself

"A Purchase Captain" writes:—"As we approach the day on which Army promotion by brevet is to cease, and we hear of no intention to suspend or relax the operations of the Royal Warrant, the dissatisfaction caused by this harsh and utterly needless proceeding becomes stronger and stronger. Few, however, of the destined victims think of making their views known to the public,—the majority, from sullen despair; the small minority, from a vague hope that at the last moment something will be done to save them. As one of the prospective sufferers, I do not share either of these views, but believe that if our case be fairly brought forward, Government would not be so unreasonable as to persist in inflicting a grievous and unmerited hardship on a great body of officers. The following figures will, I think, prove that the sufferers by the impending change are more numerous and better entitled to consideration than is commonly thought to be the case:—

* Deducting all officers holding brevet rank, there are in the Cavalry and Infantry of the Line:—

Total	1,747

* Their length of service is as under:—

	Purchase Captains.	Post-Purchase Captains.	Total.
Over 25 years...	32	1	33

All the Purchase captains are senior, as such, to every captain of the Ordnance Corps. In length of service, 200 of them are senior to the junior major of the Royal Artillery; 180 to the junior major of the Royal Engineers. Nearly half of them have paid for all their commissions, on an average, £2,400. In all, the present captains, Purchase and post-Purchase, have spent at least £1,200,000 in getting their promotion. Every one of them, on becoming captains, became eligible for promotion on two lists, that of his regiment and that of the Army at large. Now regimental promotion alone is left, and this the great majority (even of the Purchase captains) cannot hope to attain. Many, while high up the list of captains, and sure to obtain brevet promotion within a year or eighteen months at furthest, if no change had been made, are so low on the list of their regiment (owing to reduction, half-pay, exchange—often rendered unavoidable by private affairs, &c.), that regimental promotion is out of the question. It takes at present about 13 years to rise from captain to major by brevet. This time would probably tend to grow shorter in future, owing to the retirement clauses of the Royal Warrant, so that if brevet promotions were allowed to go on, the last Purchase captain would probably be promoted in 1884. Now, the first 15 or 20 captains of 1867 are the most who can hope for promotion before October, leaving more than 30 captains of 13 years' standing without the possibility of obtaining it. Suppose brevet by seniority to be an abuse (which I do not at all admit), as it was a set-off against regimental bad luck and a reward for long service, yet compare the manner of its suppression with that taken in abolishing an acknowledged anomaly, the Guards' privileges. When these were abolished in 1871, the measure was wholly prospective in its effects, every officer then in the brigade, down to the junior subaltern, being left in full possession of all his old rights, so that there still remains 30 lieutenants and captains, each of whom in his turn will succeed to be captain and lieutenant-colonel. The senior of these officers is junior to more than 350 Purchase captains, all of whom, except perhaps 15 or 20, will be left out in the cold on Oct. 1, while the 30 lucky Guardsmen will continue to jump over their heads to lieutenant-colonelcies until the last one is promoted. The senior of these officers got his first commission on the same day that the junior Line captain of 1867 got his company. The former may hope any day to find himself lieut.-col., the latter has no possible chance either of brevet or regimental promotion. The tremendous suppression by the R.A. and R.E., which has been going on for eight years, makes the position of the unfortunate Line captains (mostly without hope of regimental promotion, and now to be cut off from brevet as well) still more disagreeable than it could otherwise have been. The oldest Purchase captain (Morgan, 25th) has been already superseded by 275 R.A. and R.E. majors; the junior one by 40. Captains of 1867, who have already been passed over by 250 juniors of the Ordnance Corps, will probably if they remain in the Service to put in 25 years, find themselves superseded before the end of that period by R.A. and R.E. officers who entered the Service after they had got their companies. Annoying as supersession has hitherto been, it has been mitigated by the prospect that at no very distant period brevet promotion must intervene; but when brevet is a thing of the past, and supersession goes on as lively as ever, profound discontent and bitter bad feeling must necessarily come. It surely cannot be the intention of the Authorities to bring such a state of things about, and yet they are tending straight in that direction. The only remedy is to suspend the operation of the obnoxious clause, leave all officers who were captains at the date of the new Warrant their old rights of succession, and an act of gratuitous injustice, fraught with the worst consequences, will be avoided."

TRANSPORT.

At the Royal United Service Institution, on Wednesday, Lieut. D. Dean-Pitt, R.A., gave an account of the transport operations from Sukkur to Quetta in 1879, which he witnessed while serving under Gen. Phayre, and dwelt specially on the subject of transport for Asiatic warfare. This service should be of two kinds—the transport service proper and the corps or regimental transport. A transport worked by the Commissariat Department was to be deprecated, because in time in time of war it was strained to its utmost, and there was not a sufficiently military element in its organisation to secure efficiency in a transport service worked by it. The transport service could not be really efficient unless there was a very strong military element diffused throughout its composition; though as departments the Commissariat and Transport should be entirely separate, the one to provide stores, the other to carry them. The staging system was preferable to the convoy system, and the employment of non-commissioned officers and men in the executive was more economical than the employment of civilians for the same duty. All animals employed in transport should be the property of Government. Lord Mount-Carr urged the importance of forming the nucleus of a transport in time of peace, with a good supply of well-built carts. Sir Arthur Cunninghame agreed generally in the conclusions arrived at by the lecturer. Non-commissioned officers and men should be instructed in transport duties, the repair of saddles, carts, &c. Col. Deane and Col. Greene having congratulated the lecturer on the merits of his paper, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley, who presided, said it was of vital importance that the question of transport should be seriously considered when providing for the safety of a force, and if they studied the history of our various little wars and expeditions in a mountainous country, they would find that those expeditions that had failed, or that had done worst, had been those in which the arrangements had not been carefully marked out in detail as to the baggage, &c., to be carried, and the means for transporting it. No doubt great difficulties had to be encountered by transport officers owing to the extraordinary size of packages to be carried. He had observed such difficulties on several occasions, and it was a point that could not be neglected in the regulations, and by those who had to frame plans for any campaign. His experience went to show that all articles of food should, if possible, be made up into packages not exceeding sixty pounds in weight, and in that case they could be more easily carried, as three or four packages would make up an ordinary load. It was also exceedingly necessary to keep up the communications. The greatest of all commanders in modern days—Napoleon—boasted that in one of his greatest achievements, that of the Russian war, there was not a single postboy between Moscow and Paris that lost his way or that was killed—so exact and perfect were his arrangements for carrying on his communications at so great a distance from the base of his operations. Wellington once said that any one could command a body of troops in a great battle, but there were very few who could feed them after the battle was over. He quite shared the opinion of the lecturer that the worst means of transport they could have were pack animals, and he was of opinion that across country the most inferior description of cart was better than pack animals. With reference to the military organisation of the transport, that was a question which deserved the very best attention; and he had never yet, in any part of the world, seen a transport under the commissariat that had not broken down. The larger portion of the commissariat officers were hard-working men; but the education of most of them was not such as to enable them to be good judges of animals, and they were not men who were likely to bring the transport service into a state of efficiency. It was by the collection of such information as that contained in Lieut. Pitt's paper that they were able to draw up regulations in an effective manner for the guidance of the transport service in the future.

THE ARMY VETERINARY SCHOOL.

The establishment of a Military Veterinary School at Aldershot having been approved, the following regulations have been published for general information:—1. The School will be divided into three classes, as follows:—(a.) An officers' class for officers of the mounted branches and others, for instruction in the proper care and management of horses and other animals under the varying conditions of military service, including a knowledge of the conformation, forage, dieting, shoeing, of stable management in barracks, camp, and on board ship. Instructions will also be given in the general principles of sanitation and the ordinary diseases and lameness of horses, and how to prevent and treat sore backs. (b.) A farriers' class for farrier-majors, farrier-serjeants, shoeing-smiths, and others, for instruction as veterinary assistants, in the care and management of sick horses and other animals employed in the military service, and in the treatment of minor accidents and lamenesses, so as to render these non-commissioned officers and men useful in cases of emergency, and when with detached parties. Instructions will also be given in the principles of shoeing. (c.) A veterinary-surgeons' class for veterinary-surgeons on probation and others, for instruction in military surgery, and the routine of military veterinary duties, the sanitation of barracks and camps, the diseases and accidents peculiar to animals employed for military purposes, both at home and abroad, and in such practical knowledge as will render them fit for independent veterinary charge. 2. The school will be under a committee of management, consisting of the General officer in command at Aldershot, as president; the Inspecting-Gen. of Cavalry, the Inspecting-Gen. of Royal Artillery, the Assistant-Adjt.-Gen. and Assistant-Qrmr.-Gen. at Aldershot. 3. The committee will submit from time to time to the Adjt.-Gen. for approval such rules and regulations as it may think desirable to further the object in view. 4. The committee will also submit to the Adjt.-Gen. an annual report on the working of the school and its results. The committee will arrange the time and duration of the courses of instruction. 5. The attendance of a limited number of officers from out stations will be permitted. The names of such officers who are desirous of attending are to be submitted by their commanding officers to the Adjt.-Gen. 6. A veterinary-surgeon will be specially selected as instructor, and a military clerk will be attached to the school. 7. The instructor will, in addition, perform the duties of veterinary-surgeon to the general staff at Aldershot, assisted by the probationary-veterinary surgeons attending the school. The staff farrier-major and shoeing-smith, also the staff veterinary infirmary, pharmacy, forge, &c., will be under the direction of the instructor.

THE BRITISH ARMY OF TO-DAY.

SIR,—The journals, daily and weekly, have, with one consent, begun to abuse the present constitution of the Army, or rather no Army, at home and abroad. There is no guarantee that the opinions of regimental officers can be heard, except through the columns of the Service journals. The party papers say Cardwell is right, and so is Stanley, because Cardwell says so. The fact that our Army has to be yet created may give useful labour to members of a real Intelligence Department. I presume the old slumber, with localisation and mobilisation phantoms before them. I beg to point out that Cardwell destroyed an army, but a Stanley has not recreated it. We neither want a localiser nor mobiliser, but a creator. A few wasted pages in an Army List will not keep the Russians out of Merve.—I am, &c.,

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MILITIA SURGEONS.

"A Militia Surgeon-Major of Twenty-seven Years' Service" writes:—"Having seen the letter of a senior surgeon of Militia as to the injustice of compulsory retirement of Militia surgeons at 65 years of age, without any compensation, I beg to state that about two years ago a question was put to the Secretary for War by a Member of the House, a colonel of Militia I think, on this very matter, pointing out the hardship of enforcing compulsory retirement at 65 years of age without compensation, and that whilst it was no hardship in the case of Army surgeons, who retired with pensions, it was exceedingly unjust to require Militia surgeons to do so. And the Secretary of State for War replied that in the case of Militia surgeons compulsory retirement at 65 would not be enforced, and they would be allowed to continue serving so long as they were reported efficient and able to discharge their duties Why this promise has not been carried out I cannot understand. I for one would certainly not have elected to be placed on the Departmental List if I had known that this hard-and-fast rule would have been applied to the Militia surgeons so placed. I quite agree with your correspondent that our case should be brought under the notice of the present Secretary for War, who, some years ago, when a large deputation waited upon the late Lord Derby to urge our being placed on the staff of our regiments, accompanied the deputation and advocated our cause, and also was one of some 200 members of the House of Commons who signed a memorial to that effect, which was presented to Lord Derby on that occasion by the writer of this letter, and who was the speaker deputed to address his lordship."

Gen. Sir William Codrington, G.C.B., presided at the annual festival of the Soldiers' Daughters' Home, at Hampstead, on the 18th inst. From the report it appears that the number of girls in the school had increased from 186 in March, 1879, to 194 in March last. Of the girls admitted during the past 12 months, 15 were the daughters of soldiers who were killed or died in the Zulu war. A new playroom is in the course of erection, at the cost of £3,280, and enlarged infirmary accommodation will be soon required. More than 800 girls have now been reared within the walls of the Home, and out of these about 350 have been placed out as governesses and pupil-teachers, or else in domestic service. The adoption of the report was duly moved and seconded, and carried unanimously. The chairman next briefly addressed the assemblage, descanting upon the great need and also the merits of such an institution as the Home, and recommending it to the support of the public on the ground of its own merits. The company then adjourned to the great dining-hall, where a fine portrait of Gen. Boileau, the chairman of the committee of the Home, lately painted, by a subscription among the friends and supporters of the institution, by Mr. Sydney Hodges, was unveiled amid the loud and hearty cheers of the children. A handsomely illuminated testimonial on vellum was also presented to Gen. Boileau, who said he could receive no more welcome reward for his 16 years of service than these two presents, the one of which would long hang, he trusted, on the walls of the Home, while the other would be handed down as an heirloom in his family.

A correspondent suggests that if the information given by the captain of the Scotia Queen is to be relied on, it points to the possibility of a collision having taken place between the Atalanta and a timber ship, in which both have ultimately disappeared, the raft having first been constructed on board the timber-ship.

SIR,—In your last week's issue is an article calling attention to an extract from Lord Penzance's Army Commission, authenticated by a General officer, published by you previously, and in which it is imputed to the officers of the Line that they are apathetic as to their interests. It seems difficult to understand how such a misconception can exist, when the circumstances are so well known that militate against officers of the Line as a body being able to secure a proper hearing as to their grievances. The Medical Department focussed at Netley, and the rays of Army Medical views there concentrated, and manipulated thence by a departmental head, and the enormous Artillery Mess at Woolwich, offering, as it does, so easy a vehicle for Artillery collective views and opinions within ten miles of the Houses of Parliament, to say nothing of the offices of all the leading newspapers, explains to the simplest mind (one would imagine) the very easy means by which these Services are able to act in unison among themselves for the interests of their peculiar Services, without such a thing as the arrangement called combination. With the Line it is different. Scattered all over the world pretty well, any such means of focussing their views is out of the question, unless [some champion would arise, like the late Col. Anson, who would devote himself to the endeavour to protect the interests of those who, like the officers of the Line, are unable, from the circumstances of their lives, to protect themselves; or unless the Press, who Sir Garnet Wolseley, in his speech at their dinner last Saturday, appealed to so fervently to forward military reform, would lend a helping hand to secure for Line officers the redress that is so loudly called for. Believe me, it is not apathy, but rather despair. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," and if ever the saying could be aptly quoted, it may be applied to the Purchase officers of the Line, and specially to Purchase captains. Their lives wrecked, when Purchase was abolished in 1871, they were made to wait six years for the consequent Retirement Warrant, and this caused bitterest disappointment by its provisions, for surely neither honour nor equity was dealt out to them. For though Purchase was abolished, they were by the Warrant compelled to wait and complete 20 years' service under the new arrangement to get any consideration at all for their invested money, and even then what was offered them was not even their principal and 3 per cent. interest. Take an ordinary Infantry case, the prices of commissions and loss of interest and income thereon involved by Purchase were pretty well as follows:—

	£840	10	0
Seven years' interest, at 3 per cent.	177	14	3
	£3,533	9	3

The Retirement Warrant of 1877 offers a Purchase captain of 20 years' service and 40 years of age £245 pension a year, or a lump sum instead, viz., £3,200,—that is, £300 less than his cash and interest, at 3 per cent., already sunk; and at 40 years of age, actually only 13 years about Purchase of the £245 pension, a pension, by the way, not only not secured to the retiring officer in any way as reward for services done, but actually hampered by the conditions,—1st. That to a certain age liability to further service existed. 2nd. That the whole or any portion could be withheld by the Secretary of State for War at his simple option, and thereby preventing any sale or disposal at better than Government terms. 3rd. That no civil employment could be taken to add to income,—nor even entry into Holy Orders permitted. This speaks for itself, and I have only calculated above at three per cent. At five per cent. the total investment of the ordinary Purchase captain stands at £4,306 13s. 4d., or more than £1,100 more than he is offered as a lump sum to retire with after 20 years' service. Now every non-Purchase captain gets a pension of £200 a year, after 20 years' service. Thus it follows that all the old Purchase captain is offered is £45 a year, while the country pockets his £3,533 9s. 3d., at least; and if he retires before he completes 20 years' service, he can gain nothing; and, under existing custom, all is lost if he dies. And yet, when Purchase was abolished, the Secretary of State for War pledged his word that Purchase officers should be in no worse condition in any way, and it was on the faith of those pledges the Royal Warrant abolished it. These are all facts that any champion of the Line officers who purchased their commissions (if one will arise) can easily assure himself of—and the Press can prove, if they list—and with little trouble, and might do so, if only in memory of the salt eaten and bivouac fires shared by those of their numbers who have been war correspondents. It is quite beyond question that Purchase officers, and Purchase captains especially, are in a far worse position now than before Purchase was abolished, as the circumstances of the very question now before Parliament as to brevet promotion amply explain, and prove that Purchase was abolished in October, 1871, hence the junior Purchase captain of the Army must be at latest October, 1871. The senior captain of Artillery is May, 1872, hence he must be nearly a year the junior. And yet in a month probably he will be promoted major, and command the Purchase man, who sank his money to command the Artillery man, and undoubtedly would have done so, had Purchase not been abolished. This is supersession of Artillery over Line with a vengeance. Yet why? The best Artillery in the world cannot move a yard without an escort of cavalry or infantry, according to its branch of that Service. They could not at Waterloo in Brown Bess's days, and certainly cannot now—the period of long-range arms of precision—as the recent Cabul operations have so aptly proved. And infantry of the Line are, at any rate, independent, as even the few experiments carried out in the Meerut Division by Gen. Hardinge a year or two since, on the subject of concentrated infantry fire, so very clearly demonstrated. Why, then, should infantry officers be superseded thus by Artillery? I might continue, but,—Cui bono? The Line are scattered, and have no champion? Let one arise, and you will have little cause to hear the charge of apathy preferred against them. The Press should be their protection, and would doubtless take up Purchase officers' grievances, if brought before them, especially the questions so prominent just now,—namely, the brevets and the commission money of deceased officers, for these, and the retirement allowances to the Purchase captains, most loudly call for consideration and adjustment, in honour and

SIR,—A great nation is England, with its extensive colonies, foreign possessions, and large though not "bloated armaments." Its Navy is equal to those of any other two or three nations combined. Protected by it, innumerable merchant ships sweep the seas, and convey annually imports and exports valued at several hundred millions each; its revenues and wealth exceed those of any other nation on earth; it abolished slavery, at a cost of twenty millions; its treasures, open to the distressed of all nations, are freely lavished on the calamities or improvidence of every country under the sun; it surrendered millions—nay, double the amount which would have been sufficient—as damages, to appease the wrath and buy off the enmity of an unscrupulous and menacing nation; it squanders on intoxicating liquors nearly 150 millions a year; its small army is always ready "to go anywhere and do any or every thing;" every country in the world is witness of the valour, endurance, and successes of its soldiers, and their virtues, in the words of Havelock (though, alas! only in theory) are remembered by a grateful nation; in practice—Laudatur, et alget. Now, it will scarcely be credited by civilians, and others indifferent to military matters, that the Ministers of this great country—Conservative or Liberal, Noble, Honourable, or Right Honourable—irreproachable in private life, whose bond is their word, and who would not injure their servants or their neighbours to the extent of a farthing, should, as if by mutual consent, on the acceptance of office, deem it their paramount duty to break faith with and to rob the officers of the Army of their money, their promotion, and their privileges. And for what? Take the case of the Purchase captains, whose brevet promotion is, according to present arrangements, to cease on Oct. 1 next. The average annual rate of promotion to brevet majorities of these officers is about 30 or 35 annually, the cost £1,100 or £1,200 a year; and for this miserable dole, daily diminishing by deaths, promotions, or retirements, have been aroused an intense heartburning and dissatisfaction, such as have never prevailed before in the profession. Having in 1872, by the promotion of the Ordnance captains over their heads, inflicted the gravest professional slur, Government, by the Warrant of 1877, has put the keystone to the arch of injustice and humiliation by robbing them of all hope of promotion. These officers, it must be remembered, paid their money for that which has now turned out to be not bread; the hire of the labourers who have reaped down the national fields is kept back by fraud, and not a voice in either House of Parliament has yet been raised to denounce this spoliation of the friendless and oppressed. Every interest in England, however humble, has its advocates to obtain redress for wrongs, except the officer, who fights its battles and sacrifices his money on the faith of a Government which, for the sake of popularity, betrays him. His cry is, "Quousque tandem?"—I am, &c., MILES OLIM.

A PLEA FOR A DESERVING CLASS.

SIR,—There has been a great fuss made lately to allow officers to count their boy's service towards retiring pension; but none, as far as I know, has lifted his voice on account of those unfortunates who entered the Service late in life. In the Artillery and Engineers, I will engage to say, there are dozens of officers who obtained their commissions after 20 years of age. What a boon it would be for these if they were allowed to count their cadet's service after 20 years of age towards retiring pension! Men who retire after 20 years' service, "in nine cases out of ten," intend taking up some other profession, not seeing any hope of advancement in their present one; but if they are over 40 years of age, they are almost afraid to commence a new life, and are tempted to stay on, in the hope of something turning up. Promotion is very stagnant at the present time, and every step gained among the captains is a step in the right direction; and I cannot but think that this boon would be granted us by a Liberal Government, if some more able pen than mine would urge our cause.—Kurrachee, April 20.—I am, &c., UBIQUE.

SIR,—I noticed in your issue a few weeks since that you drew attention to the rumours afloat respecting the destruction and sale of the gardens belonging to this Royal memorial. It would, indeed, be strange if such a step should be considered necessary, and a sad destruction to the beauty of the place. Not having seen any further allusion to the subject, it would be interesting if the governors of the memorial would give some information as to the necessity of such a step, so that the Naval profession and those interested in perpetuating the memorial may have an opportunity of judging whether these gardens may not be rescued, and the original intention of the founder carried out.—I am, &c., X.

Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma. By Colonel W. F. B. Laurie. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

The peculiar nature of our relations with Burma at the present time lends a more than ordinary interest to the volume just published by Colonel Laurie. It contains an abstract of military and political operations in the years 1824-25-26, and again in 1852-53, and also offers to the reader a variety of local, statistical, and political information, together with a summary of events from 1826 to 1879, including a sketch of King Thebau's progress. We learn from the general preface that as regards its military portion, the object of the present "abstract" is twofold, namely, that of serving as a new edition of the author's former narratives, by giving a considerable part of what seemed best preserving, and adding additional incidental remarks with the view of interesting those who served in the last war, and at the same time making it in some degree useful in case of future operations. Colonel Laurie, recognising the importance of a summary of events during the first Burmese war at a moment when Burma promises to prove of more than usual interest to the military as well as the commercial world, gives a sketch of that eventful period, naturally a brief one, but yet sufficiently long to enable the reader to understand better the conduct of the two wars and our relations with Burma. Although the author most distinctly repudiates any desire on his part to advocate an aggressive policy, or even annexation, he appeals to all who have marked the progress of those eventful operations to admit freely that the first Burmese war was vigorously prosecuted, because we sought to save Bengal at least from invasion; and also, that if, during the mutiny of 1857, we had not possessed the lower provinces of Burma, the most fatal consequences might have resulted. "When the Mahommedan began to discover that he had lost his military, and the Brahmin his social, sway, they might also have discovered that Pegu was a very convenient province for the game of murder and rebellion. The second war, followed by the grand political stroke of annexation—which was forced upon us—prevented the chance of Burma aiding the fiends engaged in the Mutiny." In the "Introductory Sketch" several remarkable incidents are mentioned, among others, the projected extermination of the English in Burma by Lavine and Gregory. At an entertainment given by one Southby, a signal was suddenly heard, and he, with all his English friends, were murdered by crowds of armed men, who entered the room. Soon after, upwards of 100 of the Indian servants of the factory shared a similar fate, while the guns of the fort were turned on the British ships by Lavine. During the same year, 1757, Clive's famous note was written. Calcutta had been recovered, Chandernagore had been taken from the French, and Plassey had been won. Clive was sitting at cards when he received a letter from Colonel Forde. Without quitting the table, he wrote in pencil the following reply,—"Dear Forde,—Fight them immediately. I will send you the Order in Council to-morrow." The total defeat of the Dutch at Chinsurah followed this brief order to fight a battle. The first part of this volume contains ample remarks on the operations of the first Burmese war. Part II. refers to the second war, and the naval operations before Rangoon and Dalla. Then follows, in the third part, a detailed account of the operations from the advance on Prome to the entire conquest of Pegu. In Part IV. we find a variety of papers on Burma, including some amusing particulars respecting Mandelay, the Burmese family, and King Thebau's head queen. Colonel Laurie's work is an interesting and instructive one, either to the soldier or to the civilian. It treats of momentous events that have occurred long since, and may, perhaps, be partly forgotten. But the Burmese question has suddenly become an anxious and perplexing one, which may, by any error in judgment or by "masterly inactivity," assume an importance far greater than at present is accorded to it, and which must render highly valuable such information as that contained in Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma.

The Practical Trapping and Papers on Trapping and Snaring, by "Moorman" (Mr. W. Carnegie), published at the Bazaar Office, 170 Strand, is a very excellent guide to a neglected but useful art. We have known Austrian officers of the frontier regiments who were very skilful in trapping, and made many additions to the mess by their dodges. Where game is shy and get saway from the sight and noise of dog and gun, the trapper can prosper and fill his bag. The book, which only costs a shilling, is well illustrated.

Brook's Popular Botany.—No. 1, price 2d., of this little publication gives promise of a work of great utility. It is quite wonderful the idea was never carried out before. The work promises to describe all the plants, British and foreign, useful to man in medicine, food, manufactures, and the garden, and is very well illustrated with coloured plates. A manual of cheapness.

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—CAUTION.—These effective and agreeable confections are sold by most Chemists. By others, however, attempts are often made at substitution. We therefore deem it necessary to caution the public that they can only be obtained in boxes, 6d and 1s; labelled JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 48 Threadneedle Street, and 170 Piccadilly, London.

WATERLOO SURVIVORS.

At Richmond, on Friday last (the sixty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Waterloo), between 40 and 50 gentlemen connected with the local Volunteer corps celebrated the day by a banquet at the Star and Garter. Mr. Philip Morgan, who lost his right arm at Waterloo, in responding to the toast of "The day we celebrate," said that on Jan. 4, 1812, he had the honour to receive a commission to serve in the King's Army, having, like so many of the young, ardent, and patriotic Englishmen of the day, been seized by the war fever. An active life in the Army, under the peculiar circumstances of the time, had much more attraction for him than the more sober, possibly more remunerative, but certainly less active life provided for a young man in the routine of a carriage manufactory. It was not long before he had to go on active service, which, he was sorry to say, was brought to a premature close 65 years ago that day. Still, though he was then incapacitated from following a soldier's life, he had ever since had a yearning for it, and he felt a pride in having been present on the day the power of one of the greatest enemies of the human race the world ever saw was shattered for ever. He was glad to see in the young men of the present day the same spirit of patriotism which glowed in the breasts of their forefathers, and he felt that in the Volunteer force the country now possessed, England had cause to be proud, and her enemies cause to fear to arouse her wrath.

Capt. R. A. Leggett, late 69th Regt., writes from Strangeways, Manchester:—"Allow me to bring before your readers the case of John Shorrocks, a Manchester man, who left his trade, that of a handloom weaver, and served in the Peninsula and South of France, 1812 to 1814, including four general actions; and was also present at Waterloo with the 2nd Batn. of the old 95th. He wears two medals and four clasps. His exact age I have never been able to discover, but he must now be not less than 90. He is in receipt of 10s. 6d. a week pension, and when I saw him a few days ago, he gave me a very interesting account of his having been on picquet during the night of the 17th, and under arms during the whole of June 18. He recollects seeing Lord Wellington on the field, and his addressing a few words to the 95th. Shorrocks went up to the Duke's funeral in London in 1852, at his own expense, from Manchester, and in 1858 took unto himself a wife. Shorrocks is much shrunk, partly deaf, blind of one eye, with snowy white whiskers and beard, but not a grey hair on his head. I should be glad to receive and acknowledge any help towards soothing this veteran's last days on earth."

The dockyard officials at Plymouth report the boilers of the Tamar, Resistance, Harpey, and Gorgon as unserviceable.

It appears by an advertisement we publish to-day from the Committee of the "Hogg Memorial Fund" that the subscriptions already promised amount to £230 6s., and the expenditure, including the erection of the tablet in the Royal Naval School Chapel, to £43 7s. 7d.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

Amusements.

At the ITALIAN OPERA, "Rigoletto," with Madame Albani as Gilda, has presented the popular vocalist in one of her best parts. "Dinorah" was given on Monday night, with Madame Patti as the heroine. On Thursday, Madame Sembrich appeared for the first time as Amina in "La Sonnambula," and on Saturday next will be produced, for the first time on the stage of the Royal Italian Opera, Hérold's melodious "Le Pré aux Clercs," with Madame Albani as Isabella. The opera was first performed in Paris in 1833, when it ran 200 nights. In April, 1834, an English version was brought out at Covent Garden, under the title of "The Challenge," with Miss Shirreff, Miss Inverarity, and Messrs. Henry Phillips, Wilson, Seguin, and Harley in the caste. The scene is laid at Paris, in the reign of Henry III.

At HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, has been represented Verdi's gloomy opera, "La Fozra del Destino," with modifications both in the score and the libretto to be accepted as improvements. The opera, produced at St. Petersburg in 1862, was first brought out at the older theatre existing on this site in June, 1867. The present cast is fairly adequate to the requirements of the work, which has never attained popularity. Signor Campanini and Madame Trebelli effectively fill the prominent parts, and Madame Marie Louisa Swift, who made her first appearance in England, had a favourable reception as Leonore, but her powers are as yet unmatured. On Tuesday, Mdlle. Minnie Hauk reappeared as Carmen. "Mignon" was repeated on Friday, with Madame Christine Nilsson in the principal character; and the next novelty will be Boito's opera of "Mefistofile," to be produced, for the first time, in this country, under the personal direction of the composer.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt's farewell performance at the GAIETY having been accompanied by graceful presentations from the management in recognition of her substantial services, the series of French plays is now continued by the introduction of the Palais Royal company. The interdiction of the Examiner of Plays has, to some extent, curtailed the proposed repertory. "La Cagnotte," "Le Réveillon," and "La Boule," the pieces in which these extravagant farceurs have appeared during the week, will be remembered as having been already presented on the English stage under modified forms; but it must be admitted the exuberant drollery of the French actors gives an effect to these whimsical productions wholly absent from the adaptations of the same pieces when presented by our own performers.

The ROYALTY THEATRE in Soho has been reopened, under the management of Miss Kate Lawler, the legitimate successor to a long line of feminine lessees since the theatre was first built by Miss Fanny Kelly, in 1841. Mrs. Selby, Miss Patty Oliver, Miss Kate Santley, and many other female favourites of the public, have been through successive years identified with the lesseeship. The new directress, known as a vivacious actress of burlesque, has ventured upon no novelty, and the programme has comprised Mr. Frank Marshall's comedy of "False Shame," originally brought out at the Globe in November, 1872, and Mr. Byron's burlesque of "La Sonnambula," with which the present Prince of Wales's Theatre commenced its prosperous career on Saturday, April 15, 1865. Both pieces have been fairly represented by a company which comprises Miss Kate Lawler, Miss Fanny Coleman, Mr. Charles Sugden, Mr. H. M. Pitt, Mr. Charles Groves, Miss Marion West, and Mr. Edward Righton, as the prominent exponents of comedy and extravaganza.

The revived "Two Roses" was withdrawn from the VAUDEVILLE on Tuesday night, and on the following evening a new farcical comedy called "The Guv'nor," written by Mr. E. J. Lankester, took its place. As both Wednesday and Thursday evenings were identified with the joint benefits of the managers, Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne, and benefit nights are prescriptively exempt from criticism, all remarks upon the novelty must be necessarily deferred.

The Handel Festival at the CRYSTAL PALACE, the Tournament at the AGRICULTURAL HALL, and the Horse Show at the ALEXANDRA PALACE, Muswell Hill, have furnished during the week notable attractions widely distinct in character, but alike exhibiting their capability of delighting many thousands of spectators imbued with musical, military, or equestrian tastes.

On Wednesday the clever Dutch company gave a special morning performance at DRURY LANE THEATRE, selecting from their repertory pieces peculiarly illustrative of their national customs and domestic life. A numerous and most appreciative audience assembled. The admirable acting of the Rotterdam Dramatic Company has been universally acknowledged, but the speculation of the Dutch manager has not, unfortunately, proved a financial success.

The present engagement of Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin and their American company will terminate at SADLER'S WELLS on Saturday (this day), when a morning and evening performance of the successful drama of "The Danites" will take place, for the benefit of Mrs. Bateman. On Monday next, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" will be revived, with the clever troupe of children, engaged by Mr. Edward Saker, to represent the fairies. For the first time in the annals of the theatre, there will be no summer vacation.

Miss Mary Chatterton's Harp Recital and Grand Concert attracted a numerous and most appreciative audience on Wednesday evening to the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, the vocalists comprising Madame Marie Roze, Mdlle. Tremelli, Signor Lazzorini, Signor Del Puente, and the charming ballad-singer Mrs. Bacon, whose honourable association with the lyric stage dates from her appearance as a child at the Olympic in 1827, who delighted the auditors by their well-selected songs and duets. The accomplished harpist, Miss Mary Chatterton, won enthusiast applause by her skilful performance of two grand fantasias. In the duet for two harps, composed by Mr. Frederick Chatterton, Miss Mary Chatterton and Miss Annie Chatterton conspicuously displayed their proficiency. Signor Tito Mattei presided at the piano, and executed some difficult solos in a brilliant style.

SUCCESS IN LIFE.—"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouthwash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—LIVER, LUNGS, AND KIDNEYS.—A large number of internal maladies arise from obstructions over the removal of which these celebrated Pills exercise the most perfect control. A course of them is strongly recommended as a remedy for almost all chronic affections—as liver complaint, congestion of the lungs, torpidity of the kidneys, and other functional disorders which cause much present suffering, and if neglected lay the foundation of innumerable diseases. Holloway's Pills are especially adapted for the young and delicate; their gentle and purifying action places them above all other medicines. In indigestion, nervous affections, gout, and rheumatism, these Pills have raised for themselves a universal fame. They expel all impurities from the blood, and thus restore cheerfulness and vigour.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are almost a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

"A magazine which is not only an honour to the Services that patronise it, but also to the literature of the country."—Standard.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' is always a welcome visitor. Its numbers contain an absolute redundancy of able and important articles, the value of which is not merely confined to any peculiar distinctive interest that military and naval men may attach to them. Independent of its attractions to the two Services, there is a mass of sterling reading which no class of intelligent persons will fail to appreciate."—Morning Post.

"This is confessedly one of the ablest and most attractive periodicals of which the British press can boast, presenting a wide field of entertainment, to the general as well as the professional reader. The suggestions for the benefit of the two Services are numerous, and distinguished by vigour of sense, acute and practical observation, an ardent love of discipline, tempered by a high sense of justice, honour, humanity, and a tender regard for the welfare and personal comfort of our soldiers and seamen."—Globe.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' cannot be glanced over and laid down in an hour. Its papers are of such interest, and written by such competent men, that one would rather take one's time over its contents. We are glad to know that this Magazine is so well appreciated by the Services, and that its papers are interesting to many and doing so much good."—United Service Gazette.

LORD RAMSAY means reform. In the short time that has elapsed since he came forward as a candidate for Parliamentary honours, he has shown that he is not a likely man to follow a beaten track; and in his recent speech in the House on the Navy Estimates, he has proved that he has the courage of his opinions, and will not allow the feelings of class or profession to deter him from giving air to his ideas. At Liverpool, he gained the admiration of a large number of Liverpool Irishmen by his leaning towards an inquiry into the question of Home-rule, whereby he scandalised not a few of the politicians of the older type who hesitated to deal with so delicate a subject. And now he has upset the notions of the more ancient school in the Navy by his advocacy for free and open competition for Naval Cadetships. We own that we have not been among the advocates for throwing Naval cadetships open to the public, partly because we have felt that the present system of nomination offered to Naval officers a chance of finding a profession for their sons; and we believed that no greater inducement to endeavour to succeed in the profession could be given to young officers than the fact that they were treading in the footsteps of their fathers. Setting aside the fact that the lower rates of pay granted to retired officers after long service and ruinous spells on half-pay (when their services were not required, and consequently were not paid for by the nation) prevented their placing their sons in professions which required a heavy outlay for many years, we believed it to be an advantage to the Service that descendants of old Naval families should be allowed the first chance of entry. That chance was given by the system of nomination, which was vested in the hands of captains on commissioning ships, of flag-officers, and of the Lords of the Admiralty. But a recent move on the part of the Board, of retaining in their own hands the right of nominating all candidates, has certainly gone far to lessen the value of the system, for there is no denying that with a Board affected by changes of Government, nominations will be influenced by political motives. Open competition among boys of such juvenility as Naval cadets, boys of twelve and thirteen, was also almost objectionable. But Lord Ramsay proposes, in throwing open the junior rank of the Navy to all comers, to increase the age at which entry would be possible. Among the senior Naval officers, it has always been held that the training for a sailor's life cannot be begun too soon, and there really is something in this view. Lord Ramsay entered the Navy at an early age, and can scarcely appreciate the drawbacks that life afloat presents to those who have begun to feel their feet in life on shore. His Lordship, though a Commander who was fortunate in obtaining promotion earlier than very many of his brother-lieutenants, does not appear to be particularly wedded to sea life, and being a man of somewhat advanced views, he has chosen half-pay and Parliament in preference to service afloat. That being so, we do not lend ourselves so readily to his views, although he will have great support from the civilian element. It sounds very reasonable to say that a lad should not be entered in the Navy until he had reached the age at which he could choose his own profession, and this statement won for Lord Ramsay a certain amount of applause in the House. But after all, how can a lad who has been educated at some public school gain much of an idea of what the Navy really is? Unless a boy has been subjected to discipline of the stricter kind in his early days, he is inclined to rebel against the compulsory confinement of life on board ship, the difficulty of getting leave for a run on shore, and the great absence of liberty in almost all his actions. The Service may have improved, but still the privilege of going on shore is held very sacred in some ships, and few midshipmen get leave more than once or twice a week when in harbour. On other reforms our views are not so doubtful. Long ago we advocated the abolition of the training-ship, Britannia, and wished that a College might be established on shore. At that establishment, according to our view, cadets should be allowed to continue their education in general subjects, having especial regard to those branches of study which would be useful to them in their intended profession. At fifteen, they should be drafted into a sea-going training-ship, and, at the end of that commission, when they had reached the age of eighteen, they should be sent to regular sea-going men-of-war, and be allowed to mess in the ward-room. That is to say, they should be treated as officers at the age of eighteen, when they had finished their preliminary training, and should no longer be looked upon as mere youngsters, to be herded together in a cramped gun-room, with no senior officers to keep them in check, or to give tone to their mess. The present gun-room mess could well be turned into a junior officers' ante-room, if found advisable; but allowing young officers of eighteen years and over to associate with their seniors, instead of their being completely set aside and thrown solely among themselves, would do more to give tone to our junior Naval officers than any system of competitive examinations among candidates from the public schools or elsewhere. This has been our view of the case for many years, and we are glad to witness the present agitation against the nursery system afloat. But it will be seen that the establishment of a college ashore for the first few years of entry, followed by a sea-going training cruise, and then drafting into the regular man-of-war, would not affect the granting of nominations to the sons of old officers, and we should be sorry to see the Navy deprived of that to which many a Naval officer's son has looked forward almost as a birthright. Of one thing we are assured. The country may take Naval officers from whatever class it pleases, may give them what training may be wished, but it will never raise a class more ready than the Naval Officers of the present time and of the past to sacrifice personal wishes and convenience to the public service, or more ready to do their duty thoroughly, whenever or wherever called upon. These are officers who have been entered by nomination, and the majority of whom have some connecting link with the Navy.

Mr. Childers' announcement that next year the Government purposed abolishing flogging in the Army as part of the permanent Military Code, cannot but suggest the suspicion that the abolition of the lash will not be absolute. It may be that he merely means, by the use of the word "permanent," that he intends to try whether an army in the field can be kept in a proper state of discipline without the lash; or perhaps there is an idea of passing, simultaneously with the breaking-out of serious hostilities, a short Act enabling Courts-martial to award flogging in certain cases, as heretofore. But it is useless to conjecture, for whatever Mr. Childers' own ideas may be, he will be subjected to irresistible pressure from the pseudo-philanthropic, who have more sympathy with the blackguards unfortunately to be found in every army than with the unfortunate inhabitants of the seat of war. We may, therefore, feel pretty certain that before the expiration of another twelve months the military ravisher, plunderer, and drunkard will be relieved absolutely from all fear of receiving the punishment most suited to his crimes. Under these circumstances, it behoves us to look the matter in the face, and consider what are the best penalties which can be substituted for the lash. The greatest difficulty is that a large number of Military offenders are quite ready to commit any crime, if they think it likely to lead to their dismissal from the Service. To a considerable proportion, also, imprisonment is but a very mild punishment. Certainly, there are soldiers who would gladly exchange the hardships and fatigues of a campaign—not to speak of the dangers—for the easier life of a prison. The great point, therefore, is to devise some punishment which should be more distasteful than soldiering under its most unpleasant aspects. Such a punishment may be found in service in a disciplinary company. The Horse Guards, we are aware, are opposed to such an institution, but we have as yet not been made acquainted with any of the arguments by which they fortify their opinion, save that it would be difficult to find officers willing to do duty with disciplinary companies. This argument is of no value, for good officers perfectly suited for the work will always be forthcoming, if sufficient inducements—not hard to give—be provided. It may be urged that disciplinary companies are an innovation, and would render the Service unpopular. To that we answer that the abolition of flogging is an innovation, and that when men enlist they do not think about the nature of the punishments which they may incur if they misconduct themselves. Any man deterred from enlisting by the fear that if he commits any outrageous act he will be sent to a disciplinary company, is better out of than in the Army. The object of military punishment should be threefold,—first, to maintain good order; second, to reform men not absolutely wedded to misconduct; third, to prevent irreclaimable blackguards from infecting their comrades. Service in a disciplinary company would be extremely unpleasant, and might therefore be expected to be deterrent. A soldier who now commits a theft in order to get dismissed the Service, would not think of doing so, if he knew that he would inevitably be sent to a disciplinary company. Likewise, a man would shrink from deserting, if certain that on recapture he would exchange ordinary soldiering and a mild discipline for soldiering of a most unpleasant description and discipline of the harshest type. By a system of promoting an offender from one disciplinary company to another, every inducement would be given to reform. Again, by sending irreclaimable blackguards to the most severe disciplinary company, and though allowing them, on improved behaviour, to pass on to others less severe, but not permitting them to rejoin the Army, mischievous centres of infection would be eliminated. The disciplinary companies might be situated at stations more or less bad, according to the class, and the discipline should also be similarly graduated. The most severe companies should be reserved for the irreclaimable blackguards. Ordinary offenders should commence in number three class, and after passing through numbers four and five, should rejoin the Army. The irreclaimables should never be placed in any but classes numbers one and two. Another important and essential step would be to make desertion and fraudulent enlistment difficult. At present, it is quite easy. There is no reasonable or even plausible objection to marking every officer and man on joining the Army, and no protest would be made if the Duke of Cambridge, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Connaught would set the example. There is, moreover, an abundance of precedent in ancient history. The two best means, however, after all, of checking desertion, would be genuine localisation of regiments, and the making the Army so good a profession that men would feel it a hardship to be obliged to quit it. Under such circumstances, a more respectable body of men would be found in the ranks, and very little punishment of any sort would be required.

There appears to be every indication that the Government are likely to hear a good deal about the reward of Sir Garnet Wolseley's services at the Cape. The Standard opened the ball, and it has been followed up in many quarters, both Liberal and Conservative. We have thought it, therefore, worth while to refer to the documents bearing on the matter, and we find the case stands thus. The Warrant under which Sir Garnet was appointed a full General, and which was last revised on May 1, 1878, contains the following words:—"Temporary rank and command as General may, for the convenience of our Service, be conferred without regard to seniority, on a Lieutenant-General. . . . . . If in such temporary rank and command he shall have conducted himself to our satisfaction for five years in time of peace, or for any shorter period in the field in time of war, he may, upon the special recommendation of our Commander-in-Chief, be granted a step of permanent rank." Par. 48. Turning now to the Blue-books which contain respectively the commissions of Lord Chelmsford and of Sir Garnet Wolseley, we find that in each case the commission defined the "temporary rank," so as to make it contemporaneous with the supreme "command" in South Africa. Sir Garnet Wolseley's was a much more extensive commission, and—the point is by no means irrelevant—gave him supreme civil as well as military authority of all kinds. But in any case, "the rank and command of Lord Chelmsford, according to the terms of the commissions and Warrant, terminated when Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived in South Africa. It is obvious, therefore, that what was done in Lord Chelmsford's case is no precedent whatever for that of Sir Garnet Wolseley. Lord Chelmsford did not complete his tenure of the supreme command up to the conclusion of the work. He became, as far as the commissions warrant it, a Major-General, on Sir Garnet Wolseley's arrrival in Africa. He returned home, on leave, granted him at his own request by a senior officer. To have granted him the permanent step would not, therefore, have been merely to confirm him in the rank he had held up to the time of his return, but to restore a rank of which he had been already deprived, not because the work was accomplished, but for reasons of State, on which we have no wish further to touch. Throwing aside this case as irrelevant, we can find no other instance in which a Commander-in-Chief has been granted the temporary rank of full General for the purposes of a campaign, in which the rank has not been confirmed on the successful completion of the work for which it was granted. It is obvious at once that the case of a Commander-in-Chief and that of a subordinate officer, no matter how distinguished his services, stand on a quite different footing. There is a public, political, and national prominence about the one, which make any act in relation to him much more significant than would be the case with the other. Moreover, the high responsibility and the actual originality of the decisions that have to be arrived at are of so different a character, that it is quite impossible to put the question on the same footing. We think, therefore, that some public reason should be given for the very exceptional treatment Sir Garnet Wolseley has met with. Primâ facie, the wording of the Queen's Speech, which announced the termination of hostilities throughout Africa, would, as we see has been pointed out by the Daily News, appear to settle the question. It is hard to know how the Queen's "satisfaction" could have been more completely conveyed.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday, and, after visiting the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Ryder, dined on board the St. Vincent, returning to the Lively to sleep for the night. On Wednesday he left for Bournemouth in the Lively, for the purpose of inspecting the Coastguard. His Royal Highness expressed himself satisfied with the appearance of the men and the station generally. He then drove to Tuckton, Christchurch, and Poole, where similar inspections with like results were made, afterwards steaming in a pinnace from Poole Quay to Studland Bay, where the Lively lay at anchor. An inspection of Coastguard at Swanage then took place, after which his Royal Highness embarked on board the Lively and made for Portland, to hoist his flag on board the Hercules as Admiral Superintendent of the Naval Reserves for the combined cruise of the Channel Fleet and the Reserve Squadron.

The Channel Squadron has proceeded from Portland for Bantry Bay, and will remain there until joined by the ships under the command of Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, which will leave Portland on Monday. The two Squadrons will then combine, and be placed under the command of Rear-Admiral Hood, and will put to sea for an evolutionary cruise, proceeding as far as Vigo, and being back in England about July 26. The Fleet will consist of the following ironclads, viz.:—Achilles, Agincourt, Audacious, Defence, Hector, Minotaur, Northumberland, Penelope, Lord Warden, Valiant, and Warrior.

An exchange of ships has been permitted between Lieutenant Stewart Falls, Royal Marines, appointed to the Agincourt in the vacancy caused by the removal of Lieutenant Brine, and Lieutenant Hearle, R.M.L.I., of the Duke of Wellington.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock was at Halifax on June 18, and was about to despatch the Blanche to visit some of the outports of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, with orders to return to Halifax by the middle of this month.

It is more than hard that the recreation ground at Sheerness cannot obtain the necessary licence to establish a canteen, because the formation of recreation grounds for the Navy was not contemplated when the Naval Discipline Act was framed. There would have been no difficulty had the application been made on behalf of the Marines, as they would have been provided for under the Army Discipline Act. We hope this question will be quickly put straight, for sports without beer will not suit the Blue-jacket any more than the soldier or civilian.

It has been found necessary to order the Woodlark from Aden to Bombay, for the purpose of docking her, although she only left England three months ago.

The Russian floating-battery Kremel, which is under orders for service with the Siberian Fleet, does not appear to be made of very tough material, or offer great resistance to a colliding vessel. A trading steamer has run into this battery, and it appears that the man-of-war got the worst of the encounter.

There will now be no need to strengthen the squadron on the South-East coast of America, as, we believe, was contemplated. The Doctor who desired to fill the office of President has withdrawn from the candidature, and the revolution is at an end according to last reports, and Buenos Ayres will be peaceful once again.

The Vulture will be ordered home to England to pay off so soon as she is relieved of her duties in the Persian Gulf. The Vulture will, however, call at Bombay before sailing for England.

Major Moody, R.M.L.I., relieved Major Broughton, R.M.L.I., in command of the London Recruiting District, Royal Marines, on the 1st inst.

Captain W. G. T. Bickford, R.M.A., who lately passed through the Staff College, has been appointed to succeed Major C. C. Suther, R.M.A., as military instructor to the Royal Marines.

Information has been received of fighting between the Christian and Mahommedan population around Kaiffa, on the Coast of Syria. The Bittern and the Rapid have received orders to proceed without delay to the scene.

The Himalaya was to embark Lord Lytton and family at Bombay yesterday, for passage to England. The Himalaya will call at Lisbon on the homeward passage. She brings home the paid-off crew of the Ruby.

The following sub-lieutenants have passed in navigation at the Royal Naval College, namely, Messrs. R. P. Adams, R. A. Cave, H. Cotesworth, R. C. Evershed, G. E. Patey, and R. H. Peirse. The last-named officer was the only one who obtained a first-class in "navigation," and he had previously taken a first in seamanship. It now remains to be seen whether his knowledge of gunnery will give him "the Beaufort" and early promotion.

Inspector-General of Hospitals Dr. Macleod, who had for some time been allowed to retain the post of Senior Medical Officer of Yarmouth Hospital, although on the Retired List, has at last been relieved. Dr. Macleod certainly was an admirable officer for the charge of the asylum, but, fortunately for the Navy, it has been found that Dr. Hilston is fully capable of taking charge of this important establishment.

Admiral Ryder and the whole of the members of the Atalanta Inquiry Committee met on Thursday, when it was decided that the public inquiry should commence at the Sessions House, Westminster, on Wednesday next. It is not improbable that after a few meetings in London the Committee will move to Portsmouth to take evidence from the dockyard officials, their sittings being then held in the theatre of the Naval College in the yard. On Thursday the Admiralty withdrew their offer of £200 reward for information of the causes or locality of the loss of the ship, and will now give whatever sum they may deem justified to anyone who is enabled to throw any light upon the exact causes of the disaster. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh have, we hear, promised to assist at a fête to be held at Kensington House for the benefit of the Atalanta Relief Fund.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., with his squadron, consisting of the Alexandra, Téméraire, Rupert, Invincible, Thunderer, and Condor, left Naples Bay on June 21, leaving the Helicon and Cygnet behind. On the 24th they anchored at Bastia, when the Cygnet joined the flag with the mails. The ships left Bastia the same day, the Cygnet going to Leghorn. A great many people went on board the ships at Bastia, and the Thunderer seemed to be quite a show-ship. Steam tactics have been the order of the day since leaving Naples. The cruise is most enjoyable, and, when our correspondent wrote, many officers were looking forward to the chance of visiting Rome. While at Naples, the Prince of Naples (eldest son of the King) visited the ships, first going on board the Alexandra, where some spar torpedo-practice was gone through, and then on board the Thunderer, and saw a Whitehead torpedo fired and the turrets worked, and then proceeded to the Téméraire. He is a nice-looking boy of about 11 years, and was dressed in sailor's costume. A portion of the squadron was to go to Leghorn and the other ships to Spezzia on July 1.

A paragraph has appeared in more than one of our contemporaries to the effect that Rear-Admiral H.S.H. the Prince of Leiningen refused the appointment as second-in-command of the Channel Squadron. So far from this being the fact, it was the intention of the late First Lord of the Admiralty, as we stated weeks ago, to have given the command to the Prince, who would most gladly have accepted this opportunity of hoisting his flag. A change of Government, however, altered this arrangement, and instead of his Serene Highness having refused any offer of employment, he has had the misfortune to see another chosen before him, for a post which had even been promised to him.

Mr. James Good, chief officer of the Coastguard at Peterhead, and George Oatley, gunner's mate (whose gallant conduct in saving life from the wreck of a Swedish ship won for him the Albert medal), have, we hear, received the authority of the Admiralty to accept and wear gold medals awarded to them by his Majesty the King of Sweden.

The orders for the preparation of the Inconstant for service as a flagship, which were suspended when the late Admiralty went out of office, have now been renewed, and it is anticipated that their Lordships contemplate the formation of a detached squadron, probably giving the command to Rear-Admiral the Hon. Carr Glyn, C.B., C.S.I.

The prize for the best essay on "Lay Work in the Royal Navy" has just been adjudged by Admiral Ryder and a committee of chaplains, acting on behalf of the Naval Scripture Readers' and Naval Church Societies, but the name of the essayist we have not heard. It advocates additional lay workers in each ship, especially in those having no chaplains.

Considerable satisfaction has, we hear, been expressed at the result of the torpedo experiments recently carried out with the Hecla and the ships of the Channel Squadron at Bantry Bay.

We understand that efforts are being made to obtain for Colonel Adair, Commandant of the Royal Marine Artillery, a special order-in-council, giving him prospective advantages in respect to the award of a General's good service pension.

Mr. Hamilton Williams, M.A., who has hitherto filled the post of Latin master in the Britannia, has now been nominated "instructor in English literature," their Lordships having decided that no dead language shall form a portion of the studies of naval cadets. It is believed that their time can be better employed in branches of education which will add to their proficiency as seamen, for it must be admitted that Latin is rarely spoken afloat, although bad French is rather common among sailors.

The Japanese officers who are selected for appointment to her Majesty's ships for a cruise of observation rarely fail to make excellent use of their time, and to become popular with those with whom they serve. One who has lately been studying to qualify in navigating duties has also proved a success at the Royal Naval College, he having obtained very good marks in passing out.

Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., has been permitted by the Admiralty to proceed to sea with the First Reserve Squadron, and will be the guest of Captain Douglas, of the Warrior. We trust that this cruise will prove beneficial to Sir William Hewett, who lately suffered from illness.

The appointment last week of Assistant-Paymaster Whitfield to the Woodlark was, we regret to hear, in consequence of news having been received of the death of Assistant-Paymaster Weaver, of that ship.

In commemoration of her Majesty's Coronation, all ships in port were dressed with flags last Monday from 8 a.m. to sunset. At noon Royal salutes of twenty-one guns were fired by ships in harbour and the citadels.

The French Fleet, consisting of two ironclads and two frigates, which anchored at Tunara on the 18th ult., sailed on June 26 for the westward. Six more French ironclads and two despatch boats passed Gibraltar on June 27, proceeding in the same direction.

From Singapore we learn that, up to May 24, the harbour had been made lively by numerous arrivals and salutes of men-of-war of different nationalities. The Portuguese gunboat Mandovi arrived on the 13th, and left again for Macao on the 15th. The Brazilian corvette Vital d'Oliveira, Captain de Noronha, arrived from Galle on the 17th, having on board Admiral da Silva Mota, and H. E. Callado, Brazilian Minister to China, and left for Hong Kong on the 21st. The Russian corvette Asia, Captain Amassoff, with Rear-Admiral Aslanbegoff on board, arrived from Galle on the 17th, on her way to China, with the Russian ironclad Minin. H.N.M.'s gunboat Koetie arrived on the 21st, with the Resident of Bengkalis on board. H.M.S. Charybdis arrived on the 15th, homeward bound, and the Wivern from Galle on the 21st, on her way to China. The U.S.A. corvette Swatara left for Bangkok at daylight on the 17th. The Sarawak gunboat Aline left for Kuching on the 22nd, taking their Highnesses the Rajah and Ranee. The weather had been rather stormy during the week, with a good deal of thunder and rain.

Last week a correspondent asked the question whether it is not a fact that the red band of the Marines was removed when they were designated Light Infantry, and the black band substituted, in accordance with the practice prevailing in Light Infantry regiments of the Line. This is not so, as, for some reason best known to the authorities then at the Royal Marine Office, the red band was removed in the early part of the year 1849, whereas the corps was not made a Light Infantry one until six years later.

The following are dates on which the Army and Navy prizes will be contested at the forthcoming Wimbledon meeting, with the conditions of each competition :—Tuesday, July 20, Army and Navy Challenge Cup and prizes, restricted to non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army, and sailors from the Navy; seven shots at 200 and 500 yards, with the Martini-Henry,—1st stage, £155, in 50 prizes. The 2nd stage will be fired on Thursday, July 22, for the cup and £10. Wednesday, July 21, General Eyre's Army Prize, £100; open to any regiment of Cavalry or battalion of the Guards or of the Line, or to any division of 600 men of Royal Engineers, or to any division of Royal Marines, who shall win it through two of their representatives, either two years consecutively, or three years at intervals; 600 yards, seven shots with the Martini-Henry. Until this prize is finally won, £20 will be given annually by the National Rifle Association as follows :—£10 to be divided between the file making the highest aggregate score, £5 to the second best file, £3 to the third best file, and £2 to the fourth best file. The match between the Army and the Volunteers, for the Donegall Cup, has been removed from the programme, and a new contest for the United Services Challenge Cup substituted. This will be fired for between teams of eight from the Regular Army, Royal Navy, Royal Marines, Militia, Yeomanry, and the Volunteers, with the Martini-Henry, at 200, 500, and 600 yards, £40 being added to the cup for the winning team. The Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy, open to sections of four mounted men, or bonâ fide troopers, from each regiment of Household Cavalry and Cavalry of the Line, will be contested on July 24,—1st prize, the trophy, a cup value £21, and £25 in money; 2nd prize, £15; 3rd prize, £10; length of course, about three-quarters of a mile; five shots at 500 and 600 yards, within ten minutes, with the Martini-Henry carbine. It is notified that entries for the latter contest, which was instituted last year, may be made up to noon on July 12.

We are authorised to state that the announcement in some of the papers that the Right Hon. W. Adam has been appointed to the Governorship of Madras, is altogether premature. No arrangement has yet been decided upon as to the successor of the Duke of Buckingham, whose term of office will not be completed until November.

The Pall Mall Gazette of June 30th contained an article on the disappearance of certain valuable jewels of the State of Mysore, under British management and control, which indicates the existence of a grave scandal, and we trust that the inquiry which has been ordered will exonerate all British officials, at all events.

We learn from a private letter, dated Fez, May 28, that, "his Serene Majesty the Sultan of Morocco reviewed his Army at Fez on May 26, and before dismissing them he desired his chamberlain to call up Kaid Maclean (late lieutenant, 69th Regiment), the Instructor-General to the Moorish Army and in command of the troops, when his Serene Majesty was most graciously pleased to publicly express to the Kaid his great satisfaction and commendation of the improved efficiency, discipline, and drill his troops had attained under his instruction, and his Serene Majesty prayed God to bless Kaid Maclean and leave him a long time in his service. There was still more said, but the writer could not hear, and can only repeat what he can confidently assert as true. This speech of the Sultan is, however, considered to be the highest honour that in that country can be conferred on any officer."

The death of George Mackenzie of Avoch, the commandant for 16 years of the London Scottish Volunteer Camp at Wimbledon, had slipped through without notice, but for a little paragraph yesterday in the obituary of the leading journal. He died some weeks ago, to the great regret of a very wide circle of friends, and of all his comrades in the London Scottish, who will miss his genial presence and his kindly services to the corps, in which he was the first name which appeared in the Gazette as an officer at the time of their formation. The deceased was a member of the good old House of Avoch, in Ross-shire, the youngest son of Sir Alexander, "o' that ilk," who discovered the great river which bears his name in North America, and was among the earliest and most daring of the explorers of the Rocky Mountains, and he perpetuated in word and deed the memories of the excellent qualities of the Highland gentleman.

The question of condensed forage has not yet been disposed of, and the whole subject is being reopened, in consequence of further proposals on the part of a practical cavalry officer, who has devoted considerable attention to the matter, and has been able to secure fairly good results in previous trials, which have been carried out to test the efficacy of his system.

The following divisional order was issued at Aldershot on Wednesday :—"1. The term of General Sir Thomas Steele's command expiring to-day, all reports and returns will, on and after to-morrow, be forwarded to his successor, General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B. 2. Sir Thomas Steele relinquishes the command of the Division with great regret. 3. To the General and commanding officers, the general, departmental, and personal staff, and to those of all ranks who during his command have formed part of the Division, he offers his most sincere thanks, for the cordial support he has always received at their hands."

Aldershot is losing its oldest Staff officer, in the person of Major Trout, who has held the appointment of Provost-Marshal since the first establishment of the camp. Major Trout has applied for permission to retire, after a continuous service extending over a period of forty-three years.

The War-Office Committee on Saddles find some difficulty in deciding which is the best material of which to construct the framework of a Service saddle, wood or iron? But it is not allowing the grass to grow under its feet, and it meets regularly to discuss the subject which has been submitted to it for consideration, whilst practical experiments are being carried out to test the merits of the several ideas.

It is in contemplation to make Preston the headquarters of a cavalry regiment, in which case the 18th Hussars will proceed there from Hounslow.

A correspondent writes from Aldershot :—"We have lost this week one of our best, if indeed not our best, Staff officers, in the person of Lord William Seymour, who rejoins the Coldstream Guards, after having carried out for the last two years the responsible duties of Assistant-Quartermaster-General of the Division. To say that Lord William Seymour will be missed here is but to express inadequately the sense of thankfulness which all feel to him for his administration of his department. It is in the power of the Quartermaster-General's Department to make things pleasant or unpleasant for the soldier, but our late Assistant-Quartermaster-General has studied the comfort of subordinates in every way; and if only Colonel Buller, who succeeds to the appointment, does half as well in his new sphere of action as his predecessor has done, he will not do badly. This is not the opinion of one man only, but of every officer and soldier in the Division, from Sir Thomas Steele downwards."

The following officers have been posted to batteries of Horse Artillery to fill existing vacancies, viz. :—Major W. F. M. Hutchinson, from command of B Battery 1st Brigade, at Shorncliffe, to I Battery B Brigade, at Woolwich, vice Chichester, promoted; Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel F. S. Le Grice, from command of H Battery C Brigade, at Secunderabad, to H Battery C Brigade, at Woolwich, vice Nairne, promoted; Captain G. W. M. Turnbull, from L Battery 6th Brigade, at Kamptee, to D Battery A Brigade, at Rawul Pindee, vice Freeman; Captain H. S. Higginson, from G Battery 4th Brigade, in Afghanistan, to G Battery A Brigade, at Lucknow, vice Jones; Brevet Major J. Alleyne, from K Battery 3rd Brigade, at Woolwich, to I Battery C Brigade, at Umballa, vice Smith; Lieutenant T. S. Baldock, from H Battery 3rd Brigade, at Ferozepore, to C Battery A Brigade, at Newbridge; Lieutenant C. H. Herring-Cooper, from No. 5 Battery 7th Brigade, at Sandown, to H Battery B Brigade, at Exeter; and Lieutenant E. Gunner, from G Battery 3rd Brigade, in Afghanistan, to I Battery C Brigade, at Umballa.

The reply of Mr. Childers to Major O'Beirne left the question of the reason why the Duke of Cambridge's office was not included in the five years' list very much where it was before. It is obvious that there were and are special reasons why the Commander-in-Chief should not be included among the guests at the movable military feasts of the Staff. There will be an energetic attempt anon to instal a Chief of the Staff at the Horse Guards, and then we shall see—what we shall see. Qui vivra verra.

The colonelcy of the 4th Hussars, vacant by the death of General Lord George Paget, will most probably be filled by the transfer of Lieutenant-General Alexander Low, C.B., from the Queen's Bays, General Low having long been connected with the regiment as the 4th Light Dragoons, having served with it in the Crimea, and ultimately commanded it. The vacancy in the Bays will then be offered to Lieutenant-General G. C. Clarke, C.B., who commanded the Scots Greys previous to becoming a General officer.

Why Sir Bartle Frere is to be abused because the Cape colonists will not confederate is more than we can understand. He certainly was a little too sanguine that he could produce the result on which the Colonial Office has set its heart, but that was not a crime. Sir Bartle Frere was content to work, not to create a policy. He was somewhat too vigorous and Bismarckian in his methods, but even the Great Chancellor has failed at times. The materials for a South African Empire do not exist, and cannot be found on the spot.

According to the correspondent of the Panama Star and Herald, in Chili, the terms of peace which that Government is disposed to offer to the allies are rather severe. Bolivia is required to resign all right to the territory of Atacama, as far as the Loa, which is hereafter to be the dividing line between Peru and Chili. Bolivia's dominion on the coast will cease for ever. Peru's share of the penalty of making war on Chili is placed at the no insignificant sum of 200,000,000 dollars, and as a pledge for the payment of the same, and until such is effected, Chili will retain the district of Tarapaca.

The "Protectorate" of Asia Minor seems to have collapsed. Famine is master of the situation, and its ravages will not be stayed by the presence of a few military consuls, and without money or means. The only result of the Protectorate, so far, seems to have been the strengthening of the distrust in our intentions which has so strongly influenced the Sultan's policy.

We hear that certain religious and devoutly-disposed Christians are not unlikely to be found at Hyde Park to-morrow, just about the time of the Bradlaugh meeting.

What can the Bombay Gazette mean by dark sayings about Simla? It declares Colonel Gordon's presence there "would have been a wholesome corrective" (of what?). "It would have brought home to some frivolous people who needed the lesson, the truth that there are such things as serious purpose and directing conscience in life." We regret that Colonel Gordon is not in London just now.

Our readers may have noticed in certain of the daily papers on Monday—some had the good sense to suppress the report—a sensational paragraph, headed "A Disorderly Lieutenant," giving particulars of a case which came before one of the Middlesex police magistrates on Saturday last, in which a young officer of a Line regiment was accused of a series of offences against law and order. Those who read these paragraphs cannot fail to have been struck by the inconsistency of the evidence for the prosecution and the harshness of the sentence. It would appear—if the opinion of an eye-witness is to be believed—that the young officer in question is much to be sympathised with. He was charged with having been guilty of disorderly conduct in a place of public entertainment. Yet, those who were present at the time declare that the charge could on no pretence be substantiated. He was further accused of having made an assault on the police, whereas evidence was forthcoming to refute the charge, and show that the police not only were not assaulted, but even repudiated at first the suggestion that such an offence had been committed. It is time that police magistrates exercised some little discretion in dealing with cases of this description, for it is simply disgraceful that the good name of her Majesty's Service and the character of officers should be injured at the caprice and on the testimony of a number of policemen, more especially when, as in this case, there was evidence forthcoming to prove how groundless the charges were which were laid against the prisoner. The present case is sufficient to show what sort of justice British subjects may expect to have meted out to them, if it be their ill-luck to appear before a Metropolitan police magistrate. Such proceedings only have the effect of bringing justice into contempt.

Colonel Owen Williams has given notice of the following question, viz., "To ask the Secretary of State for War whether it is not an acknowledged fact that very serious deterioration has taken place amongst the non-commissioned officers of the regiments of the Line; whether he has any evidence before him which tends to show that this deterioration is the result of Lord Cardwell's reorganisation scheme of 1871; and whether, having regard to the great exigence of the case, her Majesty's Government contemplate taking immediate measures to remedy the existing state of affairs; and, if so, when will these remedial measures come into operation."

We regret to learn that a serious difference has again arisen at Hong Kong between the civil and military authorities. As far as can be ascertained, the circumstances are as follows:—When Major Palmer resigned the appointment of aide-de-camp to the Governor, Sir John Pope Hennessy, acting under instructions lately issued on the subject, applied to the military authorities to allow one of the officers of the garrison to act as aide-de-camp, Colonel Hall, R.A., then in temporary command of the troops, during the absence of Major-General Donovan on an inspection tour in the Straits Settlements, gave his sanction to the provisional appointment of Second Lieutenant R. C. C. Cox, 27th Regiment, to the vacant post. General Donovan, on his return to Hong Kong, however, declined to endorse Colonel Hall's action in the matter, and gave instructions to Lieutenant-Colonel Geddes, commanding the 27th Regiment, to order Lieutenant Cox to return to regimental duty. The matter having been referred to the Executive Council, General Donovan received a letter from the Colonial Secretary, informing him that the Council, after listening to his own explanation in reference to the appointment of Lieutenant Cox as aide-de-camp, were unanimously of opinion that Colonel Hall's action in the matter during his (General Donovan's) absence was in entire accordance with law and precedent, and they invited him to reconsider the matter. Unfortunately, this is not the only question at issue.

In September General Skobeleff is to begin his campaign, with 50,000 men, against the Turcomans, under Nur Verdy Khan, and columns from Krasnovodsk and Tchikishlar, aided by a railway to Kizil Arvat from Michailowsk, will seek to penetrate Turkestan and bring the refractory tribes to reason. There is little chance that the Turcomans can offer an effectual resistance, but the operations may give rise to a great upheaval in Central Asia. We do not think much importance is to be attached to the report that Skobeleff has been defeated. It is likely to be based on some skirmish only, as the Russians have not begun any offensive operations.

Mr. Childers is to be congratulated on the assurance given by him that the medal for South Africa will be distributed as soon as the rolls of those entitled to the honour can be obtained. Such comparative promptitude reflects great credit on the new War Minister. Hostilities in Perak ended four years ago, and the medals have not yet been distributed, while there is a reasonable probability that the South-African medals will be issued within a year and a half after the time at which they were earned. We never could understand why there should be so much delay in sending in the rolls of the men who were present in a campaign or battle. The materials for making them out are accessible in regiments at a moment's notice, and it is only a question of a few hours', or at most a few days', clerical labour of the simplest description. What, however, is worse than the delay which generally occurs, is the indiscriminate manner in which medals are granted; and this is especially the case with regard to colonial wars. Yet the rule ought to be a very simple and easily-applied one, at all events as regards combatants, namely, that they should at all events have been under fire. Now, we know as a fact that the Indian Mutiny medal was given to several men who were in hospital at Dum Dum whilst their regiments were in the field, and never saw a shot fired.

It is possible that by this time Sir Garnet Wolseley regrets his outspokenness on the subject of Army Reform at the Newspaper Press Fund dinner. It is equally possible that the Duke of Cambridge is now of opinion that his remarks at the Staff College dinner on Sir Garnet's speech had better have been left unsaid. Foreign officers will certainly have learnt with astonishment that a Quartermaster-General permitted himself publicly to offer adverse criticisms on the Commander-in-Chief, and be equally surprised at that Commander-in-Chief retaliating and defending himself in a speech addressed to a body of Staff officers. Certainly such proceedings are not quite in accordance with the spirit of military discipline. It must be admitted, however, that the Duke had grave provocation. To be told that the military coach was creaking, that it was difficult for it to be kept upright, and that its progress was impeded by the boulders of ignorance and prejudice was enough to annoy the person ostensibly responsible for the condition and progress of that coach, however sweet-tempered that person might be. On the occasion to which we refer, the Duke did not affect to be sweet-tempered, and let out strongly against "the person" who had made the obnoxious remark, concluding with a wish that "the person" had the driving and management of the coach himself.

When Mr. Childers, after ordering the Colonel of the Hull Artillery Volunteers to resign, and then, because the announcement of the order induced almost the entire regiment to resign also, refused to accept his resignation, he ought to have, at all events, suspended him from the exercise of command. This idea, apparently, never occurred to the Secretary of War, neither did it strike the Colonel himself that, till the report of the court of inquiry had been acted on, it would be only good taste to efface himself as much as possible. On the contrary, he called his regiment together, and, explaining the state of affairs, advised them to withdraw their resignation. Evidently both he and his men conceived they had won a victory by their undisciplined demonstration, and at the Colonel's request the men did withdraw their resignations. Indeed, parades, &c., have been resumed as if nothing whatever had occurred. We do trust that whatever may be the decision of the War Office on this particular matter, the errors—to put it mildly—of the 4th East York Artillery Volunteers and their Colonel may be shown forth in their true light, and that it may be plainly shown that soldiers with such perverted ideas of discipline are an incumbrance rather than a gain to the Army.

The distinguished-service reward, vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General F. A. Whimper, C.B., has been conferred upon Lieutenant-General Lord Alexander Russell, C.B., lately commanding the South-Eastern District.

Captain C. Armstrong, quartermaster on half-pay, late 12th Lancers, has been granted the distinguished-service reward of £50 per annum, which lately became vacant by the death of Captain (Quartermaster) T. Hoban.

"UNDER CONSIDERATION."

Scene I.

Mars Britannicus (in black toga, pepper-and-salt pants and vest, beard and eye-glass, seated at a desk in a large room in Pall Mall, with maps of North-West Frontier, Turkey in Europe, &c., on the walls, despatch-boxes, papers, and paper-baskets on table; loquitur).—Going to ask a question, is he? I'll be ready for him. Now, who on earth can answer all these fellows? I find that this very question has been asked over and over again. And it has always been answered in the same way. Yes! we must be uniform. That shows we are all united, no matter who are in power, when it comes to any disagreeable question (rings). I must see Mr. Carbonnair at once.

[Enter Carbonnair (L.C.)]

Mars B.—You have seen the notice of question about the Quartermasters? And Lord Airey's report? And the Medical Department? And—but you know the whole of them!

Mr. C. (smiling blandly).—Yes; I know them by heart,—there's a regular string. They go into dépôt centres, and subalterns' pay, and the Oliver equipment; Perak medals, and the Kirwee prize. We treat them all on the same principle. They are "under consideration."

Mars B.—What does that mean, in a general way?

Mr. C.—Why! In our room there is a large basket, which we call "consideration." And when the papers come in, and we find there is going to be a row about any question, we pop the basket on the top of them. Ha! ha! ha! So we can always instruct the Sec. to say, in reply to the people in the House, so-and-so is "under consideration." No one can go behind that!

Mars B.—Yes? But that must come to an end, Mr. C., mustn't it?

Mr. C.—I don't see that, at all! I am sure it will last our time, at all events.

Mars B.—Thank you. I am going down to the House now, fully armed on all points.

In the list of those who passed the naval cadetship examination, the name of "Melvice, F. A.," should have been "Melvill, F. W."

Designs have been accepted by the Admiralty for a table to be manufactured for the Queen from the timbers of the old Arctic exploring ship Resolute, which has been broken up at Chatham Dockyard. A copper bolt from the same vessel is to be rolled into a plate at the mills to be let into the table, and to bear a suitable inscription.

"ON THE ROAD" (TO RUIN).

[Scene.—Outside "The Royal George" Hotel. Her Majesty's mail drawn up in the street. Old-fashioned coachman, well known on the road as "the Duke," on the box. "Jim," and other sporting passengers generally, bound for "Grand Military Steeplechase." Sir C. E——e, blowing his own horn. Guard Whitmore busy with way-bill. Enter Sir Jasper Topaze, with portmanteau marked "India" in one hand, and a tin box marked "Q. M. G." in the other; looks at the mail, (loq.)]

Sir Jasper.—"Well, of all the broken-down, shaky, decrepit, discreditable old shandry-dans I ever beheld, that is the worst! I don't believe it will hold together to the end of the stage. Leaders! The near one spavined, by Jingo! The off-leader with stringhalt and ringbone! And the wheelers are worse. It's scarcely safe, and yet I must get up (eyes the driver). Hum! I think I've seen his face somewhere before; wonder if he's all right? No matter, I can drive, if he can't. I say, guard, any room there?"

Guard.—"Are you on the way-bill? Your name?

Sir Jasper Topaze.—"Sir Jasper Topaze! That's my name, of course it is—down for years—box seat, and one inside, too, in case of rain."

"The Duke" (sotto voce).—"I don't like the looks of him, Charley! Ain't he the chap as threw stones at us, as we wos turning that ugly corner near the 'Oss Gads? He's got dynamite in that tin box, I'm sure."

Guard.—"Can't help it; he's booked reglar enough. But if you're sure he's the chap, we can charge him at the end of the next stage."

Sir Jasper (mounting).—"This is the most miserable, ricketty old coach I ever saw. I must write to the papers about it. And such a lot of antiquated grooms and hostlers. There's a guard, too? Here, give me your horn; I'll show you how to handle and blow it, my boy!"

Charley.—"No, I won't; I can blow it as well as any one, I can tell you."

Sir Jasper.—"Well, then, you coachey, let me drive, any way! I don't like the old-fashioned way you hold the ribands."

"The Duke."—"Don't you now, really? You are a cool young hand, you are! You abuse our coach and our 'osses, and our whole turn-out, and yet up you gets in the best place, and then you wants to blow our horn and take our reins! Not if I knows it, young'un, as long as I'm there. All right behind?"

Sir Jasper.—"I say, you people there in the street, mind, if there's an accident, it's not my fault. I hope you'll notice it in the Press. I say——"

Sir Jasper.—"I say, look out there! We'll be on top of it. Confound it, give me the reins, I say!"

[Seizes the reins. "The Duke" resists. Terrible struggle. Coach upsets. The passengers all over the place. Result unknown as yet; but great damage done to the constitution of the Service. Sir Jasper seen sitting on his portmanteau amid the ruins.]

Sir,—Will you permit me to point out that you have somewhat misconstrued the sentence in which, in his recent speech at the Literary Fund dinner, Sir Garnet Wolseley speaks of the "boulders of prejudice?" You have, by what is, I am sure, a most unwilling slip, rendered those words in a sense which gives them a most personal and offensive application. Surely even if the words did admit, by a somewhat severe strain, of being supposed to refer to individuals, a man of Sir Garnet's age and experience might have credit given him for using them in their simple and ordinary sense, and not in one which would be most improper and injudicious. Now I submit that when men use such a metaphor as that which Sir Garnet employed, they ordinarily refer not to the "removal" of persons, but of certain mistaken views and ideas. The ordinary process on which the writers of the Army and Navy Gazette are employed from week to week is surely the dissemination of truth. By its dissemination they gradually tend to remove from the world not, I hope, any persons, but misconceptions of what facts are, and of what the truth is. In this way, they remove from the pathway of truth or of progress great "boulders of prejudice." Surely it would be a rather alarming incarnation if all these weighty stones were to be identified with certain persons. I must confess that I think the applications and not the words convey the imputation.—I am, &c.,

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The regiment—strength about 23 officers, 240 men, and 288 horses—proceeded on Wednesday from Windsor to Aldershot, and is encamped near the North Camp.

2nd Life Guards. A squadron, under command of Brevet Major Curzon, has proceeded to Windsor from Regent's Park Barracks, to do duty in the absence of the 1st Life Guards at Aldershot.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). There is no foundation for the statement that the steps consequent on the retirement of Col. Owen Williams, M.P., in September, will not go in the regiment. There was some sort of opposition among certain officers to the regular course long ago, but it seems to have subsided. Brevet Major Burnaby will get the regimental majority on the promotion of Lieut.-Col. Ives.

3rd Dragoon Guards will be removed from Island Bridge Barracks, Dublin, to England about the latter end of August.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). Serjt. J. Anderson, who recently appeared before a board of examination in Dublin, has been noted at the Horse Guards as qualified for promotion to the rank of second lieut.

1st Royal Dragoons. The move from Manchester to Ireland will be carried out next month.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Capt. Donnithorne has obtained two months' leave of absence from the 1st inst., on relinquishing his appointment as Adjutant of the Herts Yeomanry Cavalry.

4th Hussars. Gen. Lord George Augustus Frederick Paget, K.C.B., colonel of the regiment, died on Wednesday, in Farm Street, Mayfair. The sixth son of Henry William, first Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., by his marriage with Lady Charlotte Cadogan, second daughter of Charles, first Earl Cadogan, he was born in March, 1818, and entered the Army in 1834. He was appointed lieut.-col. of the 4th Dragoons in 1846, and served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-5, when he commanded the above regiment at the battle of the Alma and in the Light Cavalry charge of Balaclava. He also commanded the Light Cavalry Brigade at the battles of Inkerman and the Tchernaya, and on the expedition to Eupatoria, &c. He was promoted to the rank of col. in 1854; became major-gen. in 1861, lieut.-gen. in 1871, and gen. in 1877. He was appointed to the command of the Sirhind Division of the Bengal Army in 1862, col. 7th Dragoon Guards in 1868, and col. 4th Hussars in 1874. He was nominated a C.B. in 1855, and promoted a K.C. in 1869. He was also an Officer of the Legion of Honour, a Knight of the Order of the Medjidie (3rd class), and a brigdr.-gen. in Turkey. His lordship sat in the House of Commons, in the Liberal interest, as member for Beaumaris (which had been previously represented by his cousin. Col. Frederick Paget) from 1847 down to 1857. He was twice married—first, in 1854, to his cousin, Agnes Charlotte, fifth daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir Arthur Paget, G.C.B., and secondly, in 1861, to Louisa, youngest daughter of Mr Charles Heneage. On leaving the 4th Hussars, whom he has commanded for 11 years with such success to the regiment and credit to himself, Col. Montgomery Moore addressed a short farewell to officers and men, in orders. It took the men by surprise, as they had hardly realised the fact of his approaching departure at this untimely juncture until he was actually gone. Col. Moore has taken with him the sincere regret, the esteem, and affection of his regiment. Soldiers are said to be deficient in gratitude, but they know well enough when they are well commanded, fairly dealt by, and when those over them have their real interests at heart. In such a case, they are capable of and feel more gratitude than many credit them with, who profess to "know them," but know only their own selfish indifference. Never has a commanding officer devoted himself more, heart and soul, at home and abroad, to the well-being of his regiment in every point than has Col. Moore, from the first moment of his assuming command to the present inopportune moment of his leaving. A soldier, and first-rate cavalry officer, a gentleman in temper, word, and deed. Hating flash cant, humbug, and sensationalism, his steady aim was to give his regiment the highest standard in every particular, and to make it efficient in every sense of the word. He required and had a keen eye to see that all under him should know their work and do it. A tight hand in discipline he might and did keep; but every man knew what to expect, and was sure of meeting with justice and impartiality. Whilst he allowed no shirking of duties, no breach of such to pass unnoticed, he was no martinet, and, moreover, prompt to give a man a chance of retrieving himself; more than prompt in doing a kindness or giving a helping hand. He made the men proud of themselves and their regiment. Secure in his handling of it, he has made the regiment famed for its steadiness and quickness on parade, while his clear, far-reaching voice made his orders easy to catch. In thought for and personal attention to the men's comfort in health and sickness, to their recreations and amusements, no commanding officer has ever surpassed him. The remembrance of his unfailing thought in that direction, whether on the march, in barracks, or on board ship, will remain ever in the hearts of those who served under him. What might have been deemed "gratitude for favours to come" whilst he was still with them is freely expressed now of the commanding officer who was "good all round." It is, perhaps, not permissible to mention a lady's name in this notice, yet with the cry so generally raised that a "lady" cannot visit or look after the "soldier's wife," that her dainty feet may not carry her to the door of a barrack-room, or hospital, or "hut," that the soldier's wife may not stand "between the wind and her nobility," it may be allowed to say a word of one who leaves sorrowing hearts behind her. Herself a lady of rank, the daughter of one of England's noble soldier-heroes, Colonel Moore's wife was looked on by every woman and child in the regiment as their friend, from whom no kindness or help, great or small, in her power to bestow, would be withheld, and who made it a pleasure to be asked. From a little delicacy, or a book sent to a sick man in hospital, to the wants and pleasures of woman or child, nothing was forgotten. No circumstances or place made it impossible for her to visit the soldier's wife, wiih kind words and a bright smile for all. Her kindly presence will be missed sorely, for the private's or serjeant's wife values a friendly visit as much as her sister-woman, the captain or general's wife. That the Hon. Mrs. Moore did not lower herself in their esteem by her interest in those she has so lived amongst, sharing in their joys and sorrows, even to accompanying the poor widow as she followed the dead march to the cemetery, is proved by the deep regret she leaves behind her, the respect and affection she takes with her. May her influence among those she has so long tried to help and encourage not vanish with her!

9th Lancers. In his official of account the cavalry action in the Chardeh Valley on Dec. 11, 1879, Sir F. Roberts says the 14th Bengal Lancers "behaved splendidly." Nothing is said of the 9th Lancers. He could surely afford to say something, beyond the mere fact that they "charged," of a regiment like the 9th, which in its two charges on that day, in trying to save the guns, lost 2 officers, 16 men, and 35 horses killed; 2 officers, 11 men, and 11 horses wounded. The 9th Lancers alone charged, and the final retreat was covered by a troop of the 9th Lancers dismounted. We do not wish to disparage in any way the 14th Bengal Lancers, but it is only fair that the above facts should be known. The following is an extract from F.F.O. by Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Roberts, K.C.B., C.I.E., V.C.:—"Camp Hissarak, May 19, 1880.—The Lieut.-Gen. has much pleasure in notifying that her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to approve of the grant of distinguished-conduct medals to the under-mentioned non-commissioned officers and men of the 9th Lancers, for their gallant conduct in the action at Killa Kazi, near Cabul, on Dec. 11, 1879:—Regimental Serjt.-Major R. Young, Troop Serjt.-Major H. Spittle (since killed), Troop Serjt.-Major H. England, Pte. H. Loughead, Pte. A. Long, Pte. S. Harsent. The medal of the late Troop Serjt.-Major Spittle will be transmitted to the relatives of that non-commissioned officer."

17th Lancers. It will be interesting to know that Sir George Douglas has generously ordered from Messrs. Hamilton, Murray, and Co., of Durban, a stone, to be put on the grave of Corpl. Cotter, who fell with his son, Lieut. Douglas, 21st Fusiliers, in Zululand, and who was buried at the spot near him. It is a handsome piece of workmanship, the following inscription sloping down the ends and sides from a recumbent crucifix —"In memoriam, Corpl. W. Cotter, 17th Lancers, born at Annmount, Cork, Aug. 28, 1855; a dutiful son, a good Christian, and a gallant soldier. He was killed in the performance of his duty, July 1, 1879.—R.I.P."

Capt. J. C. Robson died at Sibi, South Afghanistan, on May 27, aged 39 years, of sunstroke. The deceased, who was eldest son of the late Mr. C. Robson, of Linden Law, Kelso, entered the Army, June 25, 1862, and became Lieut., April 1, 1875. He served in the New Zealand campaign of 1863-66 (medal).

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on the 27th ult.:—"Col. Sir Andrew Clarke's term of office having expired, he has vacated his seat in the Supreme Council. A Simla telegram of yesterday states that his services have been placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief for military duty, but the capacity in which he is to be employed is not mentioned. Some surprise is felt that Sir A. Clarke should have returned to India to resume his place in the Council for only a few days. This formality, however, appears to have been necessary in order to enable him to draw his pay. It is also said that the Marquis of Ripon hoped to be able to retain his assistance as Minister of Public Works, and that Lord Hartington was prepared to consent, but the proposal was overruled on the ground of economy by the Secretary of State in Council."

The services of Lieut.-Col. E. R. James, commanding R.E., Dublin District, having been placed at the disposal of the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland, he has been struck off the strength of the Dublin command from the 1st inst.

Grenadier Guards. Major-General Burnaby, on his promotion from the command of the Grenadier Guards, issued the following address:—"Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men,—My comrades of the Grenadier Guards, at the close of a service of thirty-four years in the regiment (in all the battalions of which I have served), it behoves me to express my heartfelt pride in the distinguished honour of having commanded a regiment second, in my belief, to none in the whole world; and my not less sincere regret that the time has come for me to say farewell. I warmly thank the officers commanding battalions for the support they have consistently afforded me, and for their zealous exertions in maintaining the efficiency of their respective battalions. I ask them to permit me to communicate directly to their officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, my sincere recognition of the earnest loyalty with which each individual, in his sphere, has co-operated to uphold and strengthen that graduated chain of responsibility, by which a perfect system of discipline has been preserved in the regiment. Devotion to the Sovereign—the glorious record of our regiment's deeds—the example set us by our predecessors,—these have animated us, one and all; and, I trust, will ever continue to be the guides to the conduct of the Grenadier Guards. Thus will ever remain, fresh and keen, that esprit de corps for which the regiment is pre-eminent, and which it has been our aspiration to maintain and transmit unimpaired. In taking leave of my comrades, of all ranks, I offer them my best wishes for the perpetuation of the regiment's proud position, for the success of their personal careers in it, and for their welfare and happiness throughout life."

21st Fusiliers. The Natal Witness has the following:—"We have had the pleasure of a call from Sir George Douglas, who is now in Durban, en route to Zululand, to perform sacred work. Sir George is the father of Lieut. J. H. S. Douglas, 21st Fusiliers, who, it will be remembered, met his death gallantly during the Zulu war, along with a corporal of the 17th Lancers, near the Kwamagwasa mission station. Sir George Douglas some time back sent out a tombstone to be erected over the grave of his fallen son, but losing his seat in Parliament for Roxburghshire, he determined, having the leisure, to come out and see the memorial put up himself. The stone has a suitable inscription on it, to the effect that Lieut. Douglas was killed on the spot while acting as signalling officer to Lord Chelmsford's army, and that it is erected by his father and mother. It is a red granite slab, and has a recumbent cross upon it."

46th Regiment. Lieut. Carden has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to join at Gibraltar.

50th Queen's Own. Col. Thompson is about to retire from the regiment, which he has been connected with for forty years, and in which he is held in the highest esteem alike by officers and men. A very elegant present has just been made by Mrs. Thompson to the officers, in the form of a set of four solid silver menu stands, on the occasion of her husband's retirement. The annual regimental dinner took place at the head-quarters of the regiment, Colchester, on the 25th ult. Present:—Gen. Sir Richard Waddy, K.C.B., Major-Gen. Weare, C.B., Col. Lock; Majors Blackall, Doran, Wilson, King, Bruce, and Barker; Capts. Hickman, MacGregor, and Bayly; Messrs. Rolleston, Allardice, and Campbell; Dr. Fraser, and Lieut. Birch.

The following is taken from Indian General Orders, dated Simla, May 24:—"Col. R. W. Hinxman, 4th Batn. 60th Rifles, having elected to be placed on the Half-pay List, on completion, on June 4 next, of five years' service as regimental lieutenant-colonel, will on that date be relieved of his command at Agra; and under instructions received from the Horse Guards, vacate the command of his battalion; Col. Hinxman is permitted to proceed to England after June 4, 1880. Lieut.-Col. C. Ashburnham, 60th Rifles, is directed to proceed to Natal to join the 3rd Batn. of his regiment, into which he has recently been promoted. Capt. F. M. Ward, 60th Rifles, is directed to proceed to England to join the 1st Batn. of his regiment, into which he has recently been promoted."

80TH REGIMENT. The Queen conferred the Victoria Cross on Colour-Serjt. Anthony Booth at Windsor Castle on Saturday. The Morning Advertiser says:—"Colour-Serjt. Booth, who wore the uniform of his corps and white helmet, arrived at the Castle early in the afternoon, and shortly before three o'clock was conducted by the Court officials to the corridor, where he awaited her Majesty's pleasure. The Queen, attended by the ladies and gentlemen of the suite, soon afterwards entered the gallery, when Colour-Serjt. Booth was introduced to the Royal notice. Her Majesty made kindly inquiries with reference to the services of the gallant soldier, appeared greatly interested with the details of the action in which he had been engaged, and expressing her pleasure on presenting him with the decoration, pinned the bronze Cross to his uniform. Colour-Serjt. Booth is a native of Nottingham.

On Saturday, the 19th ult., the regimental sports were held at the camp, Balderton, Captain Crisp acting as starter, and the whole of the programme was carried out to the satisfaction alike of competitors and visitors. On the 24th, the regiment was inspected by Col. Chippindall, C.B., commanding the Leicester Brigade Depôt, and the steadiness and cleanliness of the men on parade, despite the bad weather, was the subject of general remark. The three senior captains, Upton, Tryon, Crisp, and the three senior subalterns, Lieuts. Gray, Edwardes, and Arrowsmith, were called to the front, and put the battalion through several movements. Capt. Hooke, 45th Foot, the retiring adjutant, was presented with a very handsome silver casket, and Mrs. Hooke with a beautiful bracelet, as a token of the esteem and regard in which they are held by Col. Lowe and the other officers of the regiment, after dinner on Thursday evening. When Mrs. Hooke took her departure, the officers formed up to line the approach from the mess-tent to the carriage, and gave three hearty cheers, the band played "Auld Lang Syne," and thus the proceedings of a most agreeable evening pleasantly terminated. The regiment was disbanded on Saturday.

Scotland—Royal Ayr and Wigtown, at Ayr Camp; Royal Perth Rifles, Perth; Renfrew, Paisley; Scottish Borderers, Dumfries. Ireland—Westmeath Rifles, at Mullingar. Six out of the 13 regiments go under canvas for the full period. Up to to-day, 70 regiments have completed their training in England and Wales, 6 in Scotland, and 22 in Ireland.

The officers commanding the Militia regiments that took part in the field-day at Aldershot, at which H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief was present, on the 15th ult., have received the following letter:—"Horse Guards, June 17, 1880.—Sir,—By direction of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, I have the honour to convey to you the expression of his Royal Highness's high satisfaction with the admirable manner in which the Militia regiments inspected by him at Aldershot, on the 15th inst., acquitted themselves, and I am accordingly to request that you will be so good as to convey his Royal Highness's remarks to all concerned.—C. H. ELLICE, A.G.

The first annual dinner of the Yorkshire Militia took place on the 24th ult., at the Grosvenor Gallery. Most of the nine regiments in the county were represented, but some being out for training, their officers were unable to attend. Amongst the officers present were:—Lieut.-Cols. Gunter, 5th West York, Hay, 21st West York, Garnham, 6th West York, and Hartley, 4th West York; Major Cadman, 5th West York; Capt. and Adjt. Steney, 5th West York; Capts. Raikes, Vincent, and Groom, 3rd West York, Maryon, Wilson, 1st West York Rifles; and Lieut. H. J. Prichard, 31st West York. Past officers:—Capts. Tyrrell and Barnes, 2nd West York, and W. N. Bennett and E. Bowen, 3rd West York, and W. Newton, 5th West York; Sir Hubert Miller, Bart., Coldstream Guards; Surg. Kiernan, late 3rd West York, and Mr. Wardle.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

The following regiments will be called out on the dates and at the places indicated:—East Lothian, at Dunbar, on July 9; dismiss, July 16. Northumberland Hussars, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, July 16; dismiss, July 23. Middlesex, at Twickenham, July 17; dismiss, July 24. 2nd West York, at Harrogate, July 26; dismiss, Aug. 3. The latter regiment is allowed four marching days, ten days in all. Of the 39 regiments in England, Scotland, and Wales, the Northern District claims the largest number, 17 regiments, representing 14 counties; next comes the Western District, with 7 regiments, representing 5 counties; the Home and the North British, with 4 regiments each, the former representing 4 and the latter 3 counties; the Southern District, with 3 regiments, representing as many counties; and the Eastern and South-eastern Districts, with 2 regiments each, the former representing 2 and the latter 1 county.

The Lanarkshire, which assembled on the 25th ult., was dismissed on Thursday last.

The training of the Yeomanry for this season will be completed with the assembly of these regiments next month, viz., the Montgomeryshire, at Welshpool, on Sept. 23; North Somerset, at Bath, on Sept. 18; and the Worcestershire on Sept. 9, at Worcester.

3RD MIDDLESEX ARTILLERY were inspected by Col. Waller, R.A., on the parade-ground of Wellington Barracks on Saturday last, Lieut.-Col. Ray in command. The brigade stood in 11 batteries, the state giving about 900, as compared with 790 last year. There were not two opinions about this fine regiment. A noticeable feature of the inspection was the presence of a siege battery of 40-pounder Armstrongs, horsed.

4TH EAST YORK ARTILLERY (HULL). Lieut.-Gen. Willis, C.B., and Major-Gen. Elkington, Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. for Auxiliary Forces, with two Staff officers, attended at the Hull Volunteer Artillery Barracks on the 25th ult., for the purpose of holding an inquiry into the circumstances attending the sudden and voluntary disbandment of the brigade on the 16th ult. The inquiry, which was directed by the War Office, was held with closed doors. Col. Collington, R.A., arrived at Hull on Thursday, with instructions from the War Office for the suspension of Lieut.-Col. Humphrey and three of the captains who have acted with him, and two non-commissioned officers. The same officer appointed Major Pudsey to the command, and that officer at once countermanded a parade which Col. Humphrey had ordered for that evening.

1ST GLOUCESTER (BRISTOL) ENGINEERS. Lieut.-Col. Bramble has accepted the command of the Engineer Volunteers who will be assembled at the camp of instruction at Chatham, from the 10th to the 24th inst. Major Washbourn and Capt. and Adjt. Irwin are appointed to the staff of the provisional battalion.

1ST MIDDLESEX ENGINEERS went through inspection in infantry drill in Hyde Park and in engineering at headquarters, Chelsea, on Saturday last, by Col. Dawson-Scott, R.E., who was pleased with the evident efficiency of all ranks. Lieut.-Col. Ball was in command. The state showed 532 of all ranks, as against 563 last year.

5TH (EAST) KENT RIFLES (CANTERBURY), after seven days' sojourn under canvas at Bobbing, struck their camp, and returned to their respective homes. The annual inspection was held on the 25th ult., by Col. Steward, of the Canterbury Brigade Depôt. Col. Steward paid Col. Knocker and his regiment a very high compliment upon the excellent style in which they had performed their work. He also pronounced their camp to be perfect, the interior economy being very good indeed. The Sittingbourne troop of the Royal East Kent Mounted Yeomanry, under Capt. Locke, kept the ground during the inspection. The officers entertained over 200 ladies and gentlemen at luncheon after the inspection. The strength of the regiment is 777, and the muster was 676. Last year it was 688, but since then the regiment has slightly decreased in point of numbers. The Sittingbourne company is the strongest in the battalion, and was naturally better represented in camp, proportionately, than any other. It numbers 92, and has averaged an attendance of nearly 80 in camp throughout the week. The strength during the week was as follows:—Saturday, 427; Sunday, 423; Monday, 394; Tuesday, 459; Wednesday, 506; Thursday, 548; and Friday, 676.

26TH KENT RIFLES underwent a very satisfactory inspection at Woolwich on Saturday, by Col. Markham, R.A., D.A.A. and Q.M.G. 588 of all ranks were present, out of 647 enrolled. Lieut.-Col. Farrell was in command.

15TH LANCASHIRE RIFLES (LIVERPOOL). This fine battalion, which has recently secured the services of Lieut.-Colonel Pierce as its new commanding officer, was inspected on Saturday last by Col. de Montmorency, commanding the 13th and 14th Sub-Districts, who was very pleased with the appearance and evident efficiency of all ranks.

LONDON RIFLE BRIGADE were inspected at Mitcham Camp, on Saturday, by Col. Smith, Grenadier Guards. This was only the camp inspection, the official event being fixed for the 10th inst. by the Duke of Cambridge. Col. Smith was, he said, very pleased with his first introduction to the regiment.

2ND LONDON RIFLES were inspected on Saturday evening on the Horse Guards Parade by Col. Smith, Grenadier Guards. The muster was slightly in excess of last year's, but should have been better. There was a marked improvement in the appearance and drill of the battalion, which was under the command of Lieut.-Col. Vickers.

11TH MIDDLESEX (ST. GEORGE'S) RIFLES did not turn out so many men for inspection last Saturday as it was anticipated they would do. There was certainly an increase over last year's return, but only a small one. With so excellent a commanding officer as Col. Lindsay and a smart adjutant, the 11th should not now be in the wake of other regiments. Col. Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards, was the inspecting officer.

21ST MIDDLESEX (CIVIL SERVICE) RIFLES. The regiment is now under canvas in the Old Deer Park, Richmond, where it will be officially inspected to-day. The camp was attacked on Wednesday night by two batteries 2nd Middlesex Artillery, under Capt. MacMain, but the usual permission not having been obtained, Lord Bury very wisely ordered his men to remain in their tents, and the attacking party to return to their homes. On Thursday the Richmond Horticultural Society held a flower-show in the camp-ground, which was honoured by a visit from the Duke and Duchess of Teck, a guard of honour being formed under Capt. Tytheridge, and did great credit to the regiment.

22ND MIDDLESEX (QUEEN'S WESTMINSTER) RIFLES had a splendid muster of upwards of 900, of all ranks, on the Horse Guards Parade last Saturday, as compared with 835 last year, and passed a very satisfactory inspection at the hands of Major-Gen. Higginson. Lieut.-Col. the Duke of Westminster was in command.

37TH MIDDLESEX RIFLES, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Richards, were inspected on Saturday in the grounds of the Foundling Hospital, mustering 891 of all ranks. The inspecting officer, Col. Fitzroy, Coldstream Guards, said it would give him much pleasure to make a favourable report.

40TH MIDDLESEX RIFLES were inspected on Saturday last, at Albany-Street Barracks, by Col. Logan, C.B., commanding the 49th and 50th Sub-Districts. There were 574 of all ranks on parade, Lieut.-Col. Malet being in command, and the movements from first to last were well carried out, the two captains called out to drill the battalion being specially commended by the inspecting officer for the knowledge they had displayed.

TOWER HAMLETS RIFLE BRIGADE was inspected by Col. Gipps, Scots Guards, on Saturday evening last, in the Regent's Park. There were ten companies on parade, each of 32 files, and about 200 recruits, which gave a total force of upwards of a thousand men. Col. Gipps testified his admiration at the efficiency the corps had attained, especially congratulating Col. Mapleson upon the success of his labours.

3RD YORKSHIRE RIFLES (BRADFORD), under Lieut.-Col. Hirst, went into camp at Scarborough on Saturday.

The following regiments will be inspected to-day, viz.:—The Civil Service (21st Middlesex), at Richmond; 26th Middlesex, at Bushey Park; London Irish, in Hyde Park; the Artists, on the Horse Guards' Parade; 39th Middlesex, in the Regent's Park; and 2nd Essex, at Stratford.

The Princess of Wales has expressed her intention of being present on the last day of the Wimbledon meeting, and will distribute the prizes to the successful competitors.

INTRENCHING TOOLS.

Lieut.-Col. G. U. Prior, 100th Regiment, read a paper yesterday at the Royal United Service Institution on "Intrenching Tools." Lieut.-Gen. Beauchamp Walker, C.B., Director-General of Military Education, presided. The lecturer considered, first, what should be the construction of intrenching tools to be carried by a soldier in the ranks, having regard to serviceability and portability; 2nd, of what kind they should be; 3rd, the number a battalion should always have with it. The weight of these tools should not exceed 2 lb., and they should be made in two pieces. An infantry soldier should carry a pick as an adjunct to a spade, if it could be carried conveniently. An axe might on some occasions be as important as the spade. A combination in one tool of an axe and a pick would be most useful, while the spade should be carried by itself. The handles should be separate from the tools, and a fewer number of handles than there were tool-heads would suffice. England being comparatively a rough country, the proportion of picks to spades should be about equal. The number of handles should be three-fourths the total number of tool-heads. Taking the strength of a battalion at 1,000, it would require 700 men to carry its intrenching tools, leaving 300 without any of them to carry. Though a battalion had its full complement of tools issued to it, as if on war strength, it need never carry more than were necessary. On service, any extra tools would be put into carts and follow the baggage. The lecturer described the method of bringing the different pieces together, when the tools were required for work. If every company had always with it a certain fixed proportion of intrenching tools, there would be no chance of any body of troops ever being without them. The tools should be distributed to the battalion by companies, each piece being marked by the regiment, the letter of the company, and a number, and entered on the rolls of the company against the man's name who had charge of it. This distribution by companies should be kept to on parade,—thus, when companies were equalised in peace time on parade, the men who were not carrying any portion of the intrenching tools should first be sent to other companies, or if the whole company was broken up, the men should be sent by files, each file carrying a tool between them. Specimens of the most convenient tools were exhibited and their advantages explained. No man would carry a greater weight than 1¾ lb., and that without interfering with him when marching, shooting, or skirmishing. In the discussion, Col. Keating, V.C., doubted whether Col. Prior had got the best handle for his tool-heads, and urged the advantage of the old Celt implement, the head being fastened by a wedge-shaped pin. Col. Hale objected to the principle of dividing the handles from the tool-heads as doubling the difficulties, because if a man carrying a handle was shot in action, the man carrying the implement would be useless. It would require 800 men to carry 400 tools. The Hon. R. Baillie Hamilton, Rifle Brigade, also exhibited a set of intrenching tools, with improvements of his own, and spoke of the Roumanian shovel as perfectly useless. Gen. Sir W. Codrington said the difficulty was to get more substantial tools, without an undue increase of weight. The Chairman complimented Mr. Baillie Hamilton on the practical result of his labours in this important part of their profession, and votes of thanks were accorded to Col. Prior and Mr. Baillie Hamilton.

SIR,—As a layman, I consider the article in the Times on the Royal Marines much to the purpose, and am surprised that your technical judgment has taken exception to it. If the Royal Marine Artillery division is suppressed or amalgamated, the country will inquire,—What are the gunnery lieutenants and seamen gunners but Marine Artillery under another name? And as war has become more a mathematical science, which of these two bodies of artillerists has the highest scientific training? If equal, why cannot they interchangeably acquire the training peculiar to each? The seamanship required to manœuvre a floating fort is not what it was to handle a smart frigate, and a few months at Eastney would do no harm to the sailor officer.—I am, &c., A LAYMAN.

A court-martial assembled on board the Duncan, at the Nore, on Tuesday, for the trial of Ernest Alfred Wright, an ordinary seaman. A few weeks since the prisoner was sentenced to six months' hard labour for breaking-out of the dockyard, and ordered to be dismissed the Service. The latter sentence was cancelled. The prisoner was so exasperated at hearing this that he smashed the furniture in his cell, and used threatening language towards the master-at-arms. Wright was sentenced to eighteen months' hard labour, and ordered to be dismissed the Service.

Reviews.

Memoirs of My Exile. By Louis Kossuth. Translated by Ferencz Jausz. (London: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.)

The name of Louis Kossuth is sufficient to create more than ordinary interest in any work that treats of him, of his aspirations and his disappointments, and more than all, of his memories regarding events connected with his exile. In the volume just published, the writer sketches with impressive earnestness several of those important events that came within the scope of his knowledge, and which marked the struggles made by Hungary in her efforts to fulfil her destiny by becoming a nation. In the preface, which is remarkable for its figurative style, the author enters into a full description of the feelings which actuated him in the course which he took, and more particularly points out that as time passed on, the governing classes of Europe became more and more convinced of the truth that events in Hungary did not belong to that class of revolutionary commotions such as had for their object the acquisition of rights not before possessed by the people, which had at that time shaken the whole of Europe:—"The conviction gained ground, that in our case it was not the people that had made revolution against the governing classes, but that the governing power had so acted as to upset by force of arms a legal status based on diplomatic agreements, and forming an integral part of the international law of Europe, and an essential factor of the European equilibrium." These statements, expressed with such confidence, appear to be well-founded, when it is remembered with what indignation the world received the Russian intervention; how the National Assembly in France declared it to be dangerous to the future of liberty; and still more, how the Foreign Secretary in the English Parliament officially expressed the opinion of the Government that what was going on in Hungary was an important European transaction. These are facts beyond question, and M. Kossuth is well justified in affirming without hesitation "that there is scarcely an instance in the history of the world where a struggle for independence has called forth greater sympathy than ours." M. Kossuth, continuing his preface, thus refers to the last Russo-Turkish war:—

> "The issue of the last Russo-Turkish war—which will have a terrible influence on the future of Europe—clearly demonstrated how right I was when, at the time of the Crimean war, I endeavoured to gain practical acceptance for the political maxim, that only by taking up simultaneously the causes of Hungary and Poland, could the Eastern Question be saved from the catastrophe,—which has, unfortunately, since set in,—leading to the ominous extension of Russia's sphere of power. The Turkish Porte had seen this, and wished nothing more than that the reasonable political combination should be carried out. But her western allies, out of consideration for Austria, stopped her hand, and the hopes of my country attached to the providental opportunity vanished."

From the moment that M. Kossuth became an exile, he appears to have sought to impress not only on those with him, but on all who had the interests of Hungary at heart, that the country was to be always kept awake and vigilant, so as to be able to act in case the opportunity should offer. Moreover, that the independence of Hungary was not to be made the object for street barricades or émeutes. Thus it was that the Hungarian refugees obtained that privileged character, which induced the Emperor Napoleon the Third, when, after the war of 1859, he was reproached by the German Press for having allied himself to revolutionary elements, to reply "Ces messieurs ne sont pas des révolutionnaires, ces sont des patriotes illustres." It is quite impossible, in a brief notice of this book, to point sufficiently to its numerous merits. It offers an historical retrospect of several important events, relieved by graphic sketches of some of the men of mark who took action in them. Although many of its readers may form opinions on certain matters different from those entertained by M. Kossuth, it is not probable that any of them will question his zeal and honesty of purpose in relating the memories of his exile.

The issue of the third edition of British Decorations, by Capt. F. Brine, R.E., is the best testimonial to the value of the idea and the way in which it is worked out. In a note it is stated that the Afghan war medal riband will not be settled upon till the close of the campaign. The Zulu riband is that which has been selected for South Africa generally. Capt. Brine has been most liberal in his list, and gives, over and above all the recognised national decorations, some which are scarcely entitled to the rank. But military men, especially old Crimeans, owe him a debt of gratitude for his excellent maps and plans generally, and, above all, for the "Memorials of the Brave," which he issued in conjunction with Capt. the Hon. J. Colborne.

SOME MAGAZINES.

Time for July presents no particular feature; indeed, it may be called "below the average." A great deal of attention has been attracted to the progress of Violet Fane's serial, and that may be considered the redeeming point of the number. Seven years have passed away since we bid farewell to Sophy and Godfrey and Hickathrift, and, of course, great changes have taken place. Some readers, no doubt, will turn "Sophy" and her surroundings into ridicule, but the germs of a powerful tale of fiction have already been unfolded.

Nor is Cornhill up to the average this month. The yachting romance has spread its white wings for the fourtieth time, but they are not yet closed. "A New Study of Tennyson" may prove amusing to an inquiring mind.

There are some interesting articles in Blackwood for July, the pièce de résistance being "Wellington and Reform." This may be regarded as a carefully prepared review of the last volume of The Wellington Despatches. "The Financial Situation in India" will attract the attention of many readers who are anxious for information on this important question.

CASSELL AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.—These publications quite maintain their usual standard of merit. Most of them have now become familiar friends with such of the reading public as can appreciate cheap literature and interesting matter. To those who love to hear of the Royal Family (and is not their name legion?) the twentieth number of the "International Portrait Gallery" will prove attractive. In it there stands revealed a striking likeness of the Marquis of Lorne, accompanied by an interesting memoir of his life.

PURCHASE OFFICERS.

"Miles Olim" writes:—"In a letter published in your impression of June 26, 'Equity' denies the assertion made in the article of the 19th, to the effect that the Purchase officers are apathetic, but with amusing inconsistency afterwards admits that their silence arises not from apathy, but despair. 'Purchase Captain,' in the same number of your journal, coincides with 'Equity.' Be it so, the result is the same. Despair is not a very soldierlike quality. Have these writers ever read the Article of War which in my day, at any rate, denounced 'words tending to alarm and despondency?' It is that very 'despair' which causes all the injustice inflicted on Purchase and other officers. In the Warrant of 1877, Mr. Gathorne Hardy presumed on the 'despair' of officers when he abolished brevet promotion, and the same 'despair' may lead Mr. Childers to believe that he may do anything more iniquitous still. According to 'Equity' the Medicos and Artillery do not know what 'despair' is; they act in unison, they make their wants known in the Press and Parliament, and they obtain their ends. If he prefers the Testament to the Articles of War, let 'Equity' read the parable of the Unjust Judge,—a most appropriate text for our rulers, who, besides being unjust, never yield but to pressure and importunity. Purchase officers can do much by placing their grievances before the public. The columns of the 'Service papers' are generally open to honest, fair complaints; in that way only are Members of Parliament placed in possession of facts, and induced to act. Out of 400 Purchase captains there must surely be a few who can gain access to M.P.'s willing to plead the cause of the oppressed, and to represent to the authorities privately the hardships under which they suffer, when perhaps publication might not be expedient. The World of June 16—a journal not given to military affairs—contains an excellent article, entitled 'Soldiers on the Shelf,' written on behalf of the Purchase officers, and which may be looked upon as the fruit of the seed sown in the Army and Navy Gazette, and other papers. Excellent in other respects, as 'Equity's' letter is, it is marred by the 'despair' theory. Let him stick to his text, that gross injustice has been committed on some fifty officers by the promotion in 1872 of the Artillery and Engineers and by the Warrant of 1877, as well as on some 350 other captains, remembering the line, 'Who would be free themselves must strike the blow.' 'Despair' enters not into the composition of the Artillery, for it is announced that a departmental committee to consider, and, of course, to grant their demands, is now sitting. 'Despair' leaves the helot Purchase officers out in the cold."

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge presided at the annual Staff College dinner, at the Pall Mall Restaurant, on the 24th ult. Lieut.-Gen. C. B. Beauchamp Walker, C.B., Gen. Sir D. NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CAPTAIN BRIDGE.—Your letter is in type, and will be inserted next week.

AMICUS.—No one should pay the least attention to such rubbish. You may be quite sure the last man in the world to encourage any attack on his predecessor would be General Whitmore, who is a soldier and a gentleman. Some soldiers are not gentleman, and we suspect the inspirer of these "pars" against Sir A. Horsford is one of them.

CURIOSITY.—We do not know. It is a new phase of vulgarity to invite the people who furnish these glowing panegyrics and descriptive pieces about balls and at-homes in order that they may be made famous in the society journals. But you may be sure it is only the nouveaux riches who figure in that way, or the "strugglers."

"MR. JONES."—We believe Colonel Napier Sturt has got the use of both his legs, and that he never lost it. Do not doubt it, we advise you. The correspondent to whom you refer must be mistaken.

THOSE WHO KNOW.—You have not sent us the means of knowing who you or they are.

ARCTIC.—Too late for insertion this week.

CENTURION.—Your application should be addressed through your colonel.

HUSSARS.—The regiment did receive orders, but a change had afterwards to be made.

CONSTANT READER.—He would be allowed to put in his five years.

C. A. G. B.—Your letter is in type.

AN EYE-WITNESS.—Many thanks. We hear from more than one quarter that the officer has been shamefully treated; but the evidence is quite sufficient to acquit him in the eyes of the public.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1880.

IF "the Powers" delicately hand over to Great Britain the task of carrying out their decisions at the Berlin Conference, just as they confided to England the easier and less glorious office of doing gaoler to Napoleon I., we shall probably decline the offer with thanks. In that case, Greece might be left faré da se, if she liked to try. Well, the Turks, by the latest accounts, had 55,000 infantry, some 5,000 cavalry, and 18 batteries on their northern frontier, facing the line on which the Greeks had placed some 10,000 very inferior soldiers; and we know what that would come to, in event of the Greeks desiring to establish themselves in the ceded territory by force of arms. Perhaps the Rev. General Malcolm MacColl and Major-General Canon Liddon would head a new crusade against the "unspeakable one," who is, however, if all we hear be true, not a bit more "unspeakable" than his neighbours. If, on the other hand, Mr. Gladstone's Government accepts the work, there will be more serious business on hand for our Army than fighting Afghans or Kaffirs. The Queen has now reigned for 42 years, and there has been scarcely a year of her Majesty's reign in which there has not been a war, big or little, but mostly little; but of all the wars in which our Army has been engaged, one in which it would stand in line with the troops of "living Greece" against the Turks in Macedonia and Epirus would be probably the least promising and grateful to our troops. The Athens correspondent of a morning paper indulged us with a very warlike letter yesterday, in which he drew a very vigorous sketch of the efficiency and numbers of the Greek Army, and of the great preparations the Greeks have made for war. He was delighted with the prospect of immediate hostilities, and wrote with much fervour of the admirable results which would be gained by Greece in the field. Noble soldiers would come to the front, the air would be purified, the politicians would be sent to the right-about, and the ancient glories of Hellas would be revived by the sacrifice of Turkish blood. But, should Greece try to make good the title the Berlin Conference has given her, those who are best acquainted with the country, and the strength of the forces which would be arrayed on both sides, do not hesitate to say that the Turks would not only resist invasion with success, but that they would most probably sweep the Greeks before them, and carry fire and sword south of Jannina. In that case there would be a cry of distress raised by those who are now so full of fight, and Europe would be called upon to execute the decrees of her Plenipotentiaries. France and Germany have already declared that they will not have anything to do with military measures, and Russia and Austria may find it a very unsatisfactory exercise of practical humour to call upon Great Britain to act as the executioner of Europe. The complacency of our leading journals and politicians would perhaps be disturbed not a little, if such a grim proposal were made to them, and the answer would be more easy to give than to justify.

The death of Lord George Paget was quite unexpected, and the indisposition which terminated so fatally on Wednesday night only declared itself a few hours previously. Although he had been complaining a little for a short time back, the gallant officer's health was not impaired, and he was a candidate for a command suitable to his rank, and had been looking forward to it with confidence. His military service in the Crimea was interrupted after the action of Balaclava, in which he led the 4th Hussars with gallantry and skill, by a visit to England, for which he was exposed to unfavourable comment; but the state of the Cavalry at the time put it out of the line of active service in the field, and no one ever imputed to Lord George Paget any unworthy motive, or doubted for an instant his desire to do his duty and to face any danger in the field. On his return, he was placed in active command, and in the Crimea, as in India, subsequently, proved he was an energetic, capable officer, devoted to the arm to which he belonged. His death cast a comparative gloom over the entertainment at Knightsbridge Barracks, and prevented the presence of a large number of distinguished persons, and of many ladies connected with the House of Anglesey.

The announcement that the War Office had decided on brown leather equipments for the Army is not correct. The trials to which it has been subjected have been limited to a term of eight months in one regiment, and it has been found that there is no means of securing uniformity of colour and look in the equipment, as some parts of it exposed to greater wear than others become blanched and spotty. The reports on the buff leather equipment, on the contrary, are very favourable.

Major F. Lodge, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, has accepted the appointment of Deputy-Governor of Wakefield Prison.

Sir Walter Barttelot will on Monday next ask the Secretary of State for War whether it is the intention of the Government to act on the address of the House of Commons during the Session of 1879, for the appointment of a Royal Commission on the grievances of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers; and, if not, what steps have been or will be taken to inquire into those grievances. We imagine the answer will be that the departmental Committee now sitting at the War Office has taken the place of the more expensive Royal Commission, but it seems to us, from the constitution of the Committee and the limited nature of its inquiry, that the Report will hardly fulfil the expectations of the nation by placing the Scientific Corps on a fair footing with the rest of the Army.

Captain M'Clintock, R.A., has been appointed Assistant-Superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, vice Major W. H. King-Harman, R.A., whose period of Staff service has expired. Captain M'Clintock, who holds the advanced-class certificate, took up his duties on the 1st inst.

The appointment of Superintending Officer of Garrison Instruction has become vacant, Lieutenant-Colonel C. B. Brackenbury, R.A., who succeeded Sir E. Wood in the office in April, 1876, having accepted the offer of Colonel H. J. Hay's appointment as Superintendent of the Royal Gunpowder Factory at Waltham Abbey, which he enters upon from the 1st inst. Colonel Brackenbury is succeeded by Colonel J. P. Battersby, half-pay, late 60th Rifles, who has been employed for the last five years as Commandant of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea. Colonel Battersby will join the staff of the Directors of Military Education as an Assistant-Director.

Colonel Gordon has expressed a strong opinion that a war between China and Russia would be inevitably accompanied by an outburst of national hate on the part of the Celestials to all foreigners, and he is by no means as confident as he was that the Chinese would have the worst of it in conflict, conducted on the old principles with Europeans. One of the disturbing considerations connected with the disposition of our forces is the great change in the nature of the defence. The days of Plassey and Argaum are over for ever, and the direct attack in front of great masses is becoming more hazardous and unadvisable than ever.

It has been decided that the memorial to be erected by the subscriptions of the officers of the Army, amounting to over £4,000, to the Prince Imperial shall be placed at Woolwich, and that the execution of it shall be confided to Count Gleichen. The Committee appear to have acted with great judgment as regards the site, the statue, and the sculptor.

Major P. C. H. Clarke, C.M.G., Royal Artillery, though he has vacated his appointment as Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General on the establishment, will continue attached to the Intelligence Department of the Horse Guards, to complete the works upon which he has been for some time engaged. Major Clarke has proved himself a most valuable Staff officer, and he has been able to be of service to the Government as well as to the military authorities. His retention at the War Office is a fitting acknowledgment of the high abilities of which he has shown himself to be possessed.

Brevet Colonel E. T. W. Purcell, R.A., has been selected to succeed Colonel G. Davis, V.C., R.A., in command of the Militia and Volunteer Artillery in the Bristol District.

We learn from Canada, on the authority of an Artillery officer, at present on a visit to the Dominion, that the forts at Levis, which cost the Imperial Government so large a sum of money, are falling into decay, and that even now it would take some thousands to put them into proper repair. Our correspondent desires to draw the attention of the Colonial Defence Committee to the subject, if it comes within the scope of their functions to inquire into the matter, and take notice of it in their report.

A story has been going about that the illustrious personage who is Colonel of the Household Cavalry regiments made demands for invitations to the entertainment given by the Blues which were in excess of the number allotted by consent to the officers, and it was even stated that 400 of the guests were invited on the list of the Prince of Wales. There is not a particle of truth in the tale. His Royal Highness had ten invitations allotted to him, as an officer of the regiment,—the number allowed to each.

Prince Ibrahim Helmy, younger son of the Ex-Khedive of Egypt, having completed his education and passed his examination at Woolwich in the spring, desired to return to Egypt; but his brother, the Khedive in possession, Prince Tewfik, refused him permission to visit his native country. Against this hard and unreasonable decision Prince Ibrahim sought redress, but none of the members of the Government to whom he applied was at all disposed to interfere. It could not be alleged that Prince Ibrahim had committed any offence against the State or the laws, or that he was a dangerous person in any way; but the present Khedive thinks, apparently, that all his father's relations, male or female, are his natural enemies, and keeps them all at arm's length. The Ex-Khedive intimated a desire to visit England, but the expression of it did not elicit any warm approval, and he has abandoned the intention for the present, and does not go beyond Paris, where he will be joined by Prince Ibrahim in a few days.

Brevet Colonel A. H. King, A.D.C., has been given the vacant jacket in C Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery, and has taken up duty at Woolwich.

Major H. S. Palmer, R.E., has resigned his appointment as aide-de-camp to Sir John Pope Hennessy, K.C.M.G., Governor of Hong Kong, which he has held for the last two years.

If Mr. Childers desires to mark an era in Army administration which can never be forgotten, he will introduce two measures of real utility. The first is an increase of the soldier's meat ration; the second is an increase of the subaltern's pay. There may be doubts on various grounds of the expediency or the necessity of the latter measure. There can be no doubt whatever respecting the urgent need of the former. Let Mr. Childers consult the thoughtful regimental officers; let him ask the opinions of the best medical officers of the Army, and if he is not at once provided with an overwhelming mass of evidence on the question all on one side, we shall be astonished indeed, and promise to eat our words and our boots. The necessity for an increase of the meat ration is more pressing in proportion to the number of growing lads whom we now enlist. The want of sufficient meat drives the soldier to the canteen and to the public-house to fill his stomach with beer, and to make up for the short supply of animal food. It is asserted that the great cause of sickness in young soldiers is the deficiency of the meat ration, and the consequent recourse to the pot-house; and among the Cavalry in general, and more especially among the Household Cavalry, the hospitals owe many of the occupants to causes which might be removed by a little liberality on this one point. We entreat the War Office to institute inquiries, if any are needed, as to the truth of these statements; and if none are needed, to insist on the reforms which will tend so materially to the comfort, health, and efficiency of the Army. The bread ration is quite sufficient, but our men want more meat.

The Prince of Wales may well exclaim, as he surveys the map of the Queen's good kingdom of England, "Quæ regio in terris nostri non plena laboris?" And as time wears on, the duties of his Royal Highness seem to increase, and there are more things of all sorts to be opened—docks, bridges, quays, piers, harbours, hospitals—a strain on the most generous and self-sacrificing of men. But it is rather hard on one who does so much opening to be locked in as his Royal Highness was at Holyhead.

General regret is expressed in London society for the departure of General Bülow, the Minister of Denmark, and his accomplished wife; but the nearest approach to compensation for the loss is to be found in the appointment of M. de Fulbe, who is a persona gratissima at Marlborough House and elsewhere.

Mr. Bradlaugh may help to make laws for soldiers and sailors, but if soldiers and sailors were to give expression to Mr. Bradlaugh's opinions in public, they might be punished by the Articles of War.

The greatest regret is being expressed on all hands in the Cork District at the departure of Lieutenant-Colonel W. T. Goldsworthy, who has completed his five years as Assistant-Adjutant-General, and has left Ireland. It has been Colonel Goldsworthy's constant study to make things pleasant for everybody, and his office has been one of the best-ordered in the Irish command. He will long be remembered as a most able Staff officer, and it must be some consolation to Lieutenant-General Hamilton to feel that in losing a hard-working and popular assistant, he has secured the services of an officer of the character of Colonel. N. Stevenson as his successor.

Mr. Trevelyan asked the Secretary of State for India on Monday what was the amount of money paid yearly by the Indian Exchequer under the head of "colonels' allowances," and what was the number of officers at present in receipt of those allowances? The Marquis of Hartington stated in reply, that the amount of money paid in the year 1879-80 by the Indian Exchequer under this head was £214,980, and that the number of officers in receipt of such allowances on the 1st of April last was 348.

We fear that the official answer concerning the mutilation of the old chief Morosi's body, as reported, was both a suppressio veri and a suggestio falsi—neither perhaps in knowledge, but possibly in ignorance. We commented at the time on the absurd and unworthy pretext that the head had been removed "for anatomical purposes." But the arms were cut off from the elbow, and some witnesses (vide, Christian Express) affirm that "certain nameless mutilations" took place. The headless trunk lay unburied for days, and a stick with a strip of white calico at the top was placed between the stumps of the arms. It will be observed that there is no mention of any punishment for the perpetrators of these horrible acts. Sir Bartle Frere, however, reprimanded Colonel Bayly, who was in command, for what occurred, when it was brought to his notice.

Fawn, Capt. Wharton, was at Constantinople on June 26.

Flamingo, Com. W. H. Hall. From the New York Herald of June 15, a copy of which has been kindly forwarded by a United States Naval officer, we gather the following account:—"The Flamingo weighed anchor in the harbour of St. John's, destined for the west coast. The weather in the early morning was densely foggy and lowering, and, as a consequence, the speed of the steamer was kept much below the normal rate. All went well for an hour and a half. Cape Spear had been rounded, and the steamer's course was set at south-south-west, thus giving the land a safe berth and keeping out of the track of small fishing boats and trading schooners. The presence of icebergs on the coast was known to the captain and the officers of the Flamingo, and a very sharp and careful outlook was kept up. Two men were posted on the jibboom end at the time, and it was one of these that first descried the huge mountain of ice ahead and sounded the word of warning. The officer in command immediately telegraphed to the engine-room to have the engines reversed at full speed. In a moment the propeller was at work pulling the war-ship back out of the grasp of what nearly proved a fatal foe. The two men at the lookout on the jibboom end had barely time to scamper in over the boom and bowsprit when crash went these two spars, driven in on the deck with terrific force, smashing and unlocking all the fastenings and couplings on deck. When she struck the iceberg her jibboom and bowsprit operated as fenders, and by the time these spars were driven in on deck the headway of the vessel was almost arrested. Notwithstanding this, there are at least ten feet of the stem cut away, starting from the water-line and terminating where the bow curves away to the forefoot and main keel. It is concluded that the hull is not much strained or otherwise damaged. When the steamer forged off from the huge berg the ice towered 100 feet above her mast-heads, with terrible menacing projections threatening in their fall to sink the little war vessel deep down in the Atlantic. Had the iceberg broken up as the bows of the Flamingo crashed upon it, there could be no survivor to unfold the dreadful tale. The berg was at least a half-mile in length, and averaged about 250 feet above the surface of the water, or more than 100 feet above the mast-heads of the ship. After parting company with the iceberg the Flamingo was got round and headed for St. John's, where she arrived about an hour and a half after the accident. The position of the steamer at the time of the collision was about two miles east-south-east from Monckton Point, which is ten miles from St. John's. When the iceberg was discerned by the look-out, the Flamingo was steaming at the rate of seven-and-a-half miles. At the time of the collision her engines had been reversed nearly a minute, which reduced the speed to about three miles at the precise moment of the collision. This vessel was repairing damage done to her bows and head gear in St. John's, Newfoundland, on June 14.

Forester, Lieut.-Com. S. Smith, is en route to Bermuda from the West Coast of Africa. After refitting, she will join the flag at Halifax.

Frolic, Com. Stuart H. Rickman. This vessel was fitted out at Chatham in 1873, and has since then done good service on the China station, is now making the best her way home, showing by the progress she is making to be still a tolerably efficient ship. She left Hong Kong April 12, and arrived at Singapore April 21. The Comus, her relief, arriving a few days afterwards, she proceeded to Seychelles, leaving Singapore on April 28, touching at Auger on May 1, and reaching Port Victoria on May 22, having steamed the whole distance. A detention of a week here was unavoidable, in order to clean boilers. Left Seychelles on May 30, and arrived at Aden on June 6, from whence she will proceed to Suez on the 9th, calling at Hodüdah and Jedda on her way. She will probably make a stay of ten days at Malta, and arrive in England about the end of July, and will no doubt proceed to Chatham, to pay-off and have a thorough overhaul. This vessel had a narrow escape of being lost to her Majesty's Navy in August, 1877. Whilst proceeding down the Yang-tse-Kiang she was run into by the Dragon, iron merchant steamer, and cut down below the water-line. The water-tight doors were promptly closed, and confined the inundation to the afterpart of the ship (which filled in two minutes), by which she was enabled to steam on to an adjacent mud-bank, from whence she was towed up to Shanghai and there repaired.

Griffon, Com. F. R. Boardman, arrived at Antigua on the 9th and left on the 10th for Tortola, taking with her Judge Pemberton on official duty. She arrived at St. Thomas on June 14, and after visiting San Juan, Puerto Rico, Virgin Gorda, and Anguilla, returned to Barbados, where she remained on June 18.

Hecla, Capt. Morgan Singer, returned to Portsmouth from Bantry Bay on June 29.

Iris, Capt. Edward H. Seymour, sailed from Spithead on Tuesday morning for a trial of her Whitehead torpedo fittings in the Channel, before proceeding to the Mediterranean, her departure for this station having been delayed at the last moment.

Iron Duke, Capt. H. Cleveland, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., was, according to latest advices, about to convey Sir Thomas Wade to Vladivostock, his Excellency having gone to Tientsin to meet the Commander-in-Chief.

Lively, Lieut.-Com. Charles Le Strange, arrived at Portland on Tuesday, with Rear-Admiral his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh on board.

Merlin, Lieut. R. H. Paul. With reference to the paragraph which appeared in our last week's issue relating to Lieut. Paul, we understand that the extract quoted by us in connection with Capt. Lyell's interference with the salvage duties on which the Mosquito was engaged, was in many respects misleading. The trial did not take place at Hong Kong, but at Shanghai, before at jury of petty tradesmen, who were only too happy to have an opportunity of giving a verdict against the Naval officer. Moreover, the Mosquito was not present at the time to defend the case. Lieut. Paul's proceedings were approved both by the Commander-in-Chief and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and the latter relieved him of all the costs of the proceedings, as well as the damages awarded against him, and granted, further, his salvage claims.

Neptune. On Friday last, a series of gunnery experiments took place on board, in the presence of Rear-Admiral Herbert, Capt. Hopkins, of the Excellent, who had charge of the guns, Capt. G. Douglas, of the Vernon, and others. Proceeding out of harbour early in the morning, she steamed towards St. Helen's, off which point the programme of firing was carried out, after the 12½-ton forecastle guns had been fired with scaling charges, and then with full charges and common shell, for the purpose of clearing out the guns. The turret guns were fired as follows:—First, one round with 100 lbs. P.r. scaling charge from each gun in succession; secondly, four rounds, from each gun singly, charge 100 lbs. P.r., projectile common shells, and then charge of 130 lbs., projectiles common shell; thirdly, four rounds, each turret separately, guns horizontal, simultaneously; fifthly, four rounds, each turret separately; foremost turret guns at extreme depression, after turret guns, extreme elevation, simultaneously; and sixthly, an electric broadside, charge 130 lbs., projectiles Palliser shell, using Elswick compressor alone. Throughout the firing the ship was kept under weigh, and had previously had an hour's run for the purpose of testing her machinery and trying a water injection which had been experimentally carried into the engine-room, which it was found to appreciably cool. The hydraulic arrangements of the turrets answered satisfactorily in all respects, the recoil of the monster weapons only varying from 3 ft. to 3 ft. 9 in., with the exception of when the mechanical compressor was brought into requisition, when the recoil, through its not being completely set up, was 5 ft. Even the firing of the broadside did not sensibly affect the heel of the ship, and the damage occasioned by the concussion was comparatively light, owing to the guns being trained somewhat forward. Glass and joiner's work were demolished, and a gig, hanging between the two turrets, was wrecked, but in expectation of this an old one had been placed there. The Woolwich sights were used and were found to enable the permanent heel of the ship and the elevation or depression of the gun to be simultaneously determined. The trials gave almost better results than had been anticipated. The Neptune went out of harbour on Tuesday for an electric broadside to be fired, with only the Elswick compressors applied to the turret guns to diminish the recoil, and a series of experimental trials was made to ascertain if the men could remain at quarter under the forecastle while the fore-turret guns were being trained forward. When the broadside was fired one of the Brush electric lamps was used in the turret to determine whether the concussion would extinguish it by breaking the carbons, but the discharge was found not to affect the light. Before the Neptune came into harbour two Whitehead torpedoes were discharged, each fitted with a chemical composition, which indicates the progress of the missile by emitting smoke by day and light by night.

H.M.S. ACHILLES.

SIR,—A letter in your impression of the 19th ult., from "One Who Knows the Blue-jacket," should not be allowed to pass without answer, as it is likely to mislead persons unacquainted with the subject of which your correspondent treats. He says that the action of the Admiralty in only allowing the men of the Achilles to have three days' leave is the cause of many acts of insubordination, and then proceeds to state that the conduct of the commanding officer of the Achilles (who regulates the boats) towards the men is scandalous. With regard to the first charge, when a man-of-war is commissioned, her crew are expected to bid farewell to "England, home, and beauty" till they pay off. On foreign stations, of course, the men cannot go home to see their friends, but when a ship, during the latter part of her commission, is fortunate enough to touch at English ports, it appears very unreasonable to me to say that because they enjoy England, they are also entitled to the home and beauty as well. It may be tantalising to pass our home without being able to visit it, but I do not think that it is unjust or any excuse for acts of insubordination. As to the second charge brought by your correspondent, he simply states the thing that is not; men going on leave are invariably provided with boats (except under special circumstances, when the exigencies of the Service might prevent it). It is not for me to speak of the captain or commander of the Achilles, their ability and worth are so well known in the Service, that they as little require my defence as they are likely to suffer from the unfair and unfounded attack of your anonymous correspondent.—I am, &c., ROBERT NOEL, Lieutenant, R.N.

SIR,—In the Army and Navy Gazette of the 19th ult. a letter appeared, signed by "One Who Knows the Blue-jacket," containing a series of uncalled-for and untrue complaints against the powers that be in the Achilles. His complaints were, in detail, 1st, that only three days' leave was to be given at Portland; 2nd, that a number of cases of insubordination have occurred in consequence of such short leave; 3rd, that a great deal of dissatisfaction has been caused on the lower deck by a "want of consideration" on the part of the executives, especially because there were not enough boats supplied to the men, even though the "ship was hung round with them." With regard to the first complaint, it can only be said that the writer, or complainant, was premature. The second may be dismissed almost as shortly, for it is well known that the men who have lately been tried by court-martial (and even those punished by the captain) for insubordination, have been under punishment for previous offences of the same description, and that every one is glad when they leave the ship for—the best place for them—the prison. As to the statements that our men have "almost invariably" to pay their own way on shore, it is laughable, but astonishing, that a man could be found who would write in such wonderful ignorance of H.M.S. Achilles, and also show the small knowledge he possesses of the routine of any ship; but, then, he "knows the Blue-jacket," which knowledge, I may suppose, makes up for his want of truth. As to the "utter want of consideration" shown by our officers to the men, it is truly in the "exuberance of his own verbosity" that he has said so; for the general opinion is that we pull together, one and all. That we have had, and still have, black-sheep is a sorrowful fact, but their sable colour only causes them to show out in very strong relief against the purity of the remainder of our flock.—I am, &c., ATRIDES.

[The writer of the original letter knows more of the Achilles than our correspondents imagine; and it was not a growl from the lower-deck, although we have received confirmatory evidence from that quarter.—ED. A. & N. G.]

ROYAL UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

An interesting lecture was delivered last Monday by Mr. Thorsten Nordenfelt at this institution on "Machine-Guns," Admiral Sir Frederick Nicolson, Bart., C.B., in the chair. Want of space prevents our reproducing the paper in extenso. Mr. Nordenfelt differs from those gentlemen who consider machine-guns as competing with artillery. He holds them to be special weapons, invaluable for special purposes, mostly created by the great advance during late years in all other branches of the science of war. The torpedo-boat had to be met by special weapons, and machine-guns came to the front ready to deal with it so effectually that a daylight attack now becomes almost an impossibility. The machine-guns must also be acknowledged sooner or later as invaluable against the modern swift, unarmoured ships which, with their speed of 15 to 18 knots, give but little chance to the present recoil guns. In the Army there has also been an almost complete revolution in the weapons of warfare. Rifled cannons have increased the precision and effect of projectiles, and have enabled artillerists to fire at enormous ranges. The rifle has given the same advantages to the Infantry, and still the repeating rifle or magazine rifle is pressing on the ordinary breech-loading rifle. Mr Nordenfeldt then proceeded to say:—"I look upon machine-guns as mechanical contrivances for economising human labour and human life in war. All experience, especially of the last 20 years' wars, tends to prove that the best weapon does as much or more to secure victory than the best man; and that the best armed man is often master of the situation under very adverse circumstances, and is always the conqueror if his discipline is as good as that of his enemy. The question of expense for a country like England is also relative, for if machine-guns can shorten a war by a week, or can prevent the blockade of a single colonial port, the possible expenses for extra supply of ammunition must be repaid tenfold.

"In order to give a clear description of the guns generally, I must divide machine-guns as seen from two different points of view:—First, (a) Machine-guns with revolving barrels which cannot fire volleys; (b) guns with fixed barrels, and which can fire either volleys or single shots as desired. Second, (1) Machine-guns firing the same projectiles as the rifles of each country; (2) machine-guns firing projectiles of larger calibre than rifle calibre, principally for the purpose of penetrating ships' plates, boilers, &c. My machine-guns have fixed barrels, and can always fire volleys, unless any Power prefers to submit to single firing for the purpose of gaining lightness and simplicity. They are also equally well adapted for small and for large calibres. The Gatling gun is the original type of the opposite system with revolving barrels, which cannot fire volleys, and I hope that Dr. Gatling will excuse my saying that his revolving gun, with moveable breach supports, is tied down to the first part of my second basis of division, viz., that his gun can only fire rifle ammunition with advantage. The Hotchkiss gun is a development of the Gatling idea with revolving barrels, and cannot fire volleys, but with his solid breech support he has gained the point of being able to fire projectiles of large calibre; while, on the other hand, he has lost all rapidity of fire, so that his system is impossible for rifle ammunition. Mr. Hotchkiss, therefore, naturally condemns all machine-guns which fire rifle ammunition, and brings his large experience to bear upon competition with artillery in firing shells. The Gardner gun lies between the two in the first division. It fires with fixed barrels, or rather barrel, but it cannot fire volleys; and up to this moment I believe that it only fires rifle ammunition. I would, however, hardly class the Gardner gun with machine-guns, because the single-barrelled gun which Mr. Gardner himself especially recommends is rather a clever repeating rifle, while it at the same time requires the full service of men and equipment of a machine-gun. Of all other machine-guns, such as the Montigny, the Albertini, the Lowell, the Trotter, the Rowbottom, and numerous others, I can only say that some have already withered and belong to the past, while others still show only in the bud, without any immediate prospect of coming into bloom. In the Palmcrantz system the barrels are fixed in a level line, or in an arch, the breech supports are brought forward to the barrel chambers, pushing the cartridges in front of them; then the breech is locked, the cartridges fired, the breech unlocked, and the fired cartridge cases extracted by the retiring breech-plugs, the fresh supply of a layer of cartridges being provided by the cartridge receiver, which, by a traversing motion, carries the cartridges from the compartments in the feed case, which correspond to the barrels, into a line with the rear of the chamber, ready to be pushed in by the next forward motion of the breech-plugs. I wish especially to point out that the fact of our system having fixed barrels is very advantageous, not only because it saves the work of revolving the barrels, but also because when we come to larger calibres, we can use heavier charges of powder per calibre, without unduly increasing the weight of the gun; whereas, in a revolving gun, with barrels of large calibre, and with heavy charges of powder, which necessitate considerable thickness of steel in the barrel, the pressure of the explosion of the cartridges acts so far from the centre of the revolving motion, that all these parts must be made especially strong and heavy in order to prevent their being bent or upset, which would hinder the smooth action of the two revolving surfaces, viz., the chamber base and the face of the breech. Dr. Gatling has seen the importance of this, and has provided a regulator for adjusting the distance between chamber and breech; but this regulator is, on the other hand, rather a source of trouble, and it requires great judgment on the part of the gunner, and if used incorrectly, might throw the gun out at an important moment.

"For Field Use, there are two entirely separate kinds of machine-guns; the one is a shell-firing gun, which would compete with field artillery, which Mr. Hotchkiss has worked out with a certain amount of success. As to this, I can to-day only say that I hope shortly to be in a position to show that the effect produced by the Hotchkiss gun can be produced by a smaller number of fixed barrels and lighter weight of gun, when the advantage might, perhaps, be held out to the artillery that the same weight of metal in the shape of small shells, spread more evenly over a surface, may be thrown per minute by a gun of smaller calibre and light weight than what is now done by the present light field gun; on this point, however, I do not speak at the present moment with much confidence. The other kind of machine-gun is the much-abused small-bore battery-gun or mitrailleuse, as representatives of which I take my ten-barrelled gun, which weighs 2½ cwt., and fires 110 Martini-Henry bullets in five seconds; and my five-barrelled gun, which weighs from 110 lb. to 135 lb., and fires 70 shots in five seconds. The ten-barrelled is, of course, the most effective, but it requires two horses for gun and limber. The question of the use of these ten-barrelled guns in the field will probably require a further study and consideration, but there can be no doubt that for the defence of bridges, roads, and temporary intrenchments, they must be most useful. An entirely new face in the use of mitrailleuses has, however, been opened up by the small five-barrelled gun which weighs less than one-third of the service Gatling gun, while it fires much more rapidly, say, about 500 rounds per minute, or, for spurts of 100 shots at the time, at the rate of nearly 800 shots per minute. This gun, with its limber on wheels, can be drawn by one mule or by three men; it can be carried on one horse, with the trail on a second horse, or the gun and pivot can be carried all on one horse; when required, the gun and pivot can be carried on the shoulders of three men, who also carry the ammunition in special knapsacks.

"For Naval Use.—I begin with the small-bore machine-gun, and here, again, there is use for both a ten-barrelled and a five-barrelled gun. As these guns use the same ammunition, and as the system is the same, it is no disadvantage to have both guns in the Service, because every sailor who can fire the one can also fire the other. On large vessels two ten-barrelled guns in fixed position on deck would be most effective for sweeping the decks of an enemy's vessel. I have not liked to say much about what these guns have done, because they are still under the consideration of the Machine-gun Committee, whose experiments will be continued as soon as we shall have completed new guns for the new ammunition decided upon by the Committee, in lieu of the present service ammunition, for which latter the guns were first made. I think, however, that I may say that my guns have done at least as well as my competitors', and that I can therefore offer one and the same satisfactory system throughout all the calibres required by the Navy. While I am fully aware it would be wrong to lose any one advantage on board for portability and convenience ashore for naval guns, still my small five-barrelled gun is so very suitable for landing purposes that this should not be lost sight of. Three sailors can pull the gun and limber; four sailors can carry the gun and trail in case the wheels have to be left behind; and the ammunition is kept in knapsacks in the limber, ready to be carried wherever the limber cannot be conveniently taken. With six or eight men this gun would be as well served as the Service Gatling with 18 men, and it fires more quickly, and is much more simple and not likely to jamb.

"Anti-torpedo-boat Gun.—For this special purpose it is quite clear to me that the right calibre is the smallest calibre which gives sufficient penetration, viz., 1 inch, because the smaller the calibre the larger number of barrels can I use in each gun, the greater number of shots can I fire in each volley, with correspondingly greater chance of hitting, and the more can I increase the actual rapidity of fire as the range against an attacking torpedo-boat gets shorter, and the effect of each bullet proportionately greater. This gun fires steel bullets weighing somewhat less than ½ lb. each, with an initial velocity of about 1,400 feet, which gives a maximum penetration, at 200 yards, of ¾-in. steel plate at right angles, ¼-in. steel plate at 25° angle, and 3-16ths-in. steel plate at 20° angle, while it penetrates the side of a second-class torpedo-boat at 10° angle, tearing up a hole many times larger than the bullet. It goes straight through a torpedo-boat (in and out again) at a distance of an English mile at right angles."

A full report of the recent experiments with this gun at Spithead has already appeared in our columns, its success having been acknowledged.

We have received from the author, Mr. W. R. Pullen, a very interesting and ingenious little work, "The Origin and History of the Union Jack," the price of which is but 6d.

Capt. Cocker, lately in command of the Chinese Customs cruiser Fei Ho, has been appointed to the post of naval adviser at Tientsin. Mr. Deputy-Commissioner Clayson, formerly in our Royal Navy, is now in charge of the Tientsin fleet. The Chinese are making serious preparations for the defence of Shanghai. The iron-cased fort at the mouth of the Hwang-poo has been manned by about 3,000 troops, while the main approaches to the port are guarded by four of the 38-ton gun gunboats.

The directors of the Wheal Hony and Trelawny United Silver-Lead Mining Company (Limited) invite subscriptions for 25,000 shares of £2 each, to enable them to purchase and work the property known as the "Hony Estate," near Liskeard, Cornwall, which is said to comprise the mineral riches of the greatest silver-lead bearing lode in the county. From the reports received, the directors state they believe they will be able to pay a yearly dividend of 43 per cent. on the entire share capital. The price to be paid by the company is £10,250 in cash and 7,250 fully paid-up shares.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

The COVENT GARDEN Italian Opera season will be brought to a close in another fortnight. The only novelty to be included in the programme is announced for next Saturday, when M. Jules Cohen's opera of "Estella" will be produced, with Madame Adelina Patti as the heroine. Although Hérold's tuneful opera of "Le Pré aux Clercs" is not, perhaps, heard to the best advantage through the medium of an Italian version, it has been rendered very acceptable to the musical public by the refined singing of Madame Albani as Isabelle. Besides the effective concerted music, and the light, graceful songs, the audience derive delight from the presentation of the work as an operatic spectacle of great splendour. A most picturesque scene has been painted by Messrs. Dayes and Caney, giving a view of the famous meadow, with the River Seine and the Palace of the Louvre. Superb costumes appropriate to the period have been provided, and several ballets have been introduced, in which the three Mdlles. Reuter display some skilful dancing. The Dresden prima donna, Madame Sembrich, has repeated her success as Amina in "La Sonnambula," and Madame Patti has proved that Verdi's "Il Trovatore" has not even yet lost all power of attraction.

At HER MAJESTY'S, Mdlle. Minnie Hauk has made her last appearance this season in "Carmen," and Madame Etelke Gerster has made her first appearance this season in "Sonnambula." On Saturday (this) evening will be produced, for the first time in England, and under the personal direction of the composer, Signor Arrigo Boito's opera of "Mefistofele." In this new version of an old, familiar story, Madame Christine Nilsson represents Marguerita, Signor Campanini Faust, and Madame Trebelli Martha, while the arch-tempter is impersonated by Signor Nannetti.

The new farcical comedy called "The Guv'nor," written by Mr. E. G. Lankester, and recently produced at the VAUDEVILLE, is perhaps not particularly striking in either dialogue or construction; but owing to the excellent support which it receives from the actors, the piece now goes extremely well with the audience, and may help to "fill a pit" as well as a better composition. Mr. David James, as a deaf, old, bibulous boatbuilder, known as Theodore Macclesfield, and Mr. Thomas Thorne, as a stammering youth, bearing the same name, have parts precisely suited to their special capabilities, and the Misses Larkin, Bishop, Illington, Abington, and Richards, with Messrs. Maclean, Herbert, and Bradbury, effectively sustain the other characters in the cast. Compression has greatly improved the representation since the first night, and the three-act farce is now drawing fine average houses.

The Palais Royal Company at the GAIETY are running through their repertory as rapidly as possible, and few of their pieces are repeated more than twice. The result is curiously shown in the almost nightly reappearance of the same audience.

The last representations of "As You Like It" will be given at DRURY LANE next week, and if satisfactory arrangements can be made with American managers, Miss Litton will appear in the comedy at New York in the autumn, accompanied by her entire company.

"Les Cloches de Corneville" and "The Danites" were transferred last Monday evening to the OLYMPIC and the GLOBE. Both pieces, with no other attraction than that of locality, have kept a firm hold of the favour accorded them at other establishments, and supported by the performers who have been so closely identified with the success of each production. The comic opera and the Californian drama seem likely to preserve admirers under slightly changed conditions.

Mr. Boucicault terminated his present engagement at the ADELPHI on Friday night, and will not return to the theatre till August, when his new Irish drama is to be brought out. On Saturday, his adapted four-act drama, called "Forbidden Fruit," will be played for the first time at this establishment, preceded by a revival of the old Adelphi drama of "The Wreck Ashore," first produced here in October, 1830, and now recalling vivid memories of John Reeve, as the pompous village beadle, Marmaduke Magog.

Mr. Creswick returned last week to London from his successful tour through the Australian colonies, and has been warmly congratulated by his friends on his good-health and good-fortune. Mr. Sothern has crossed over from New York to enjoy a holiday of deep-sea fishing on the Yarmouth coast, and our theatrical clubs are nightly visited by American actors, who will play a short engagement in this country before returning to the United States.

Mr. Sydney Alport, of DRURY LANE (acting manager and treasurer), announces that he will take a benefit on Friday, July 9, when will be performed, for the 133rd time, "As You Like It." Tickets may be had at the Box-office, Mitchell's Royal Library, or of Mr. S. Alport.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for purchasing and working a property rich in silver-lead, known as Hony Estate, situate near Liskeard, Cornwall, together with the celebrated Wheal Trelawny Silver-Lead Mine immediately adjoining on the south.

The Hony property comprises the mineral riches of the greatest silver-lead bearing lode in Cornwall, intact from the very surface to a depth already proved of 300 fathoms, extending nearly half-a-mile in length, from the boundaries of the Wheal Trelawny on the south to the celebrated Trewetha on the north.

The Estate was the property of the late Dr. Hony, who had firmly resolved never to sell or let it, notwithstanding the repeated solicitations of capitalists and the most tempting offers.

The offers were made owing to the extraordinary richness of the silver-lead bearing lode in the celebrated Wheal Mary Ann and Trelawny on the south, Trewetha on the north, and the continuance of the lode without variation right through Hony property from boundary to boundary. During the lifetime of Dr. Hony, the Trelawny miners encroached beyond their boundary on the present estate, and extracted some silver-lead ore, for which the Wheal Trelawny Company had to pay a large sum of money by way of compensation.

The rich mineral deposit consists of a strongly-compressed and concentrated silver-lead, bearing lode from 3 to 6 feet wide, which may be considered proved from the surface to a depth of 300 fathoms, extending the whole length of the property, and containing the richest ore in large paying quantities. It averages about 1 ton of silver-lead ore per fathom, and as the ore contains from 50 oz. to 60 oz. of silver per ton, the value per fathom is estimated at over £20.

The mine having been so proved to a depth of 300 fathoms, on a run of 330 fathoms it is calculated that the quantity of workable silver-lead ore is of the value of about

The adjoining mines, Wheal Mary Ann, Wheal Trelawny, and Trewetha, returned silver-lead ore worth over £1,500,000 sterling from the same lode and paid very large dividends to Shareholders.

Captains Hancock, Grenfell, Pearce, Willcocks, Hodge, and Metherell, who have known the property from 20 to 30 years, verify the above statements, and give full details in their reports, copies of which may be had at the offices of the Company.

Captain Hancock says:—

"I have known the ground for thirty years, and worked in the Trelawny Mine, near Hony, about twenty-four years ago; since then was agent in the district under the late Mr. Peter Clymo. It is one of the best (if not the best) pieces of mining ground for Silver-Lead Ore in the country, and cannot in my opinion fail to make a good dividend property."

Captain Willcocks writes:—

"Whoever is fortunate enough to secure this property will have the most profitable Mine in the county and a certain fortune."

Captain Metherell says:—"The lode may be considered proved to 300 fathoms, so that there is no speculation or risk. I will merely add that I know of no other property with such certainty of success."

Captain Hodge writes:—"I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that there is not another mining property in the Kingdom with such prospects and such a certainty of immense profit, and having such advantages for economical and speedy development."

Mr. Matthew Loam (the Company's Engineer) writes:—"If there is any confidence in Cornish mines, this scheme is worthy of it."

Yield one cubic fathom = one ton value	£20	0	0
Cost as above	8	0	0
Profit per ton	£12	0	0

150 tons per month at £12, or a nett profit of £21,600 per annum, being 43 per cent. per annum on the entire Share Capital of the Company.

This estimate does not include profits that may arise from the deeper working of the Wheal Trelawny Mine. In the opinion of the best mining captains, the Wheal Trelawny will help to swell the dividends of the Company.

The shafts sunk in the Wheal Trelawny are available for pumping and winding the ore, thus saving an immense amount of time, and enabling the silver-lead ore to be speedily raised and made marketable.

High roads pass through the property, and the Liskeard and Menheniot Stations of the Cornwall Railway are each within about two miles of the property, rendering the carriage of silver-lead and materials very convenient and inexpensive.

The following are the names and dates of the agreements and leases for acquisition of the property:—1st June, 1880, Messrs. Hony, Iliffe, and Russell and Messrs. Hamley and Derry; 28th May, 1880, C. Trelawny and Messrs. Hamley and Derry; 21st June, 1880, W. K. Milborne and Messrs. Hamley and Derry.

Prospectuses, with forms of application for shares, can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, Solicitor, Bankers, and Auditors. The reports, plans, and agreements above referred to may be inspected at the Company's Offices.

The vendors provide all expenses necessary to the formation of the Company up to allotment. £5 per cent. per annum discount will be allowed for prepayments. Priority of application will be considered.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The stomach and its troubles cause more discomfort and bring more unhappiness than is commonly supposed. The thousand ills that settle there may be prevented or dislodged by the judicious use of these purifying Pills, which act as a sure, gentle anti-acid aperient, without annoying the nerves of the most susceptible or irritating the most delicate organisation. Holloway's Pills will bestow comfort and confer relief on every headachy, dyspeptic, and sickly sufferer, whose tortures make him a burden to himself and a bugbear to his friends. These Pills have long been the popular remedy for a weak stomach, for a disordered liver, or a paralysed digestion, which yield without difficulty to thei regulating, purifying, and tonic qualities.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A magazine which is not only an honour to the Services that patronise it, but also to the literature of the country,"—Standard.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' is always a welcome visitor. Its numbers contain an absolute redundancy of able and important articles, the value of which is not merely confined to any peculiar distinctive interest that military and naval men may attach to them. Independent of its attractions to the two Services, there is a mass of sterling reading which no class of intelligent persons will fail to appreciate."—Morning Post.

"This is confessedly one of the ablest and most attractive periodicals of which the British press can boast, presenting a wide field of entertainment, to the general as well as the professional reader. The suggestions for the benefit of the two Services are numerous, and distinguished by vigour of sense, acute and practical observation, an ardent love of discipline, tempered by a high sense of justice, honour, humanity, and a tender regard for the welfare and personal comfort of our soldiers and seamen."—Globe.

"Many of its articles will be found interesting to other than those immediately connected with the Services."—The Times.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' cannot be glanced over and laid down in an hour. Its papers are of such interest, and written by such competent men, that one would rather take one's time over its contents. We are glad to know that this Magazine is so well appreciated by the Services, and that its papers are interesting to many and doing so much good."—United Service Gazette.

THE

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

SHOULD Lieutenant-General Wolseley be made a full General, because he held that rank out in South Africa? An able officer, who favoured us with an article on the subject, which appeared in last week's number, under the heading "Communicated," evidently thought he should, and that it was a great shame and injustice that Sir G. Wolseley had not been confirmed in the rank he had when he was serving as Commander-in-Chief and High Commissioner at the Cape. That view has been expressed elsewhere, and has been mentioned in many quarters. As we were anxious to let the voice of the advocates of Sir Garnet Wolseley's claims be heard, we inserted the communication, but it did not follow that we accepted the arguments on which the writer based his demands. The strongest point which was put forward was that the custom of the Service had been departed from, and that it was a proceeding as unusual as it was invidious to refuse to do in this particular instance what had been almost invariably done in like cases previously. We shall not express any opinion on the question whether Sir G. Wolseley ought to be made a General in consequence of what he did in Africa, but we have no doubt whatever that he has no abstract right to be made a General on the grounds on which his friends ask that his temporary and acting rank when abroad should now be confirmed. In order to give him absolute supreme control of all officers then in the field in South Africa, he was made full General, while employed as Commander-in-Chief. It would have been better to have antedated his commission, so as to put an end to all "seniority" pretensions; but it is as plain as any rule can be that the giving of the rank for a special purpose did not justify the Lieutenant-General in expecting that he would be made a General on his return to England. It cannot be denied that he did good service. By the fortune of war, he was denied the opportunity of commanding at the decisive battle which broke the power of Cetewayo for ever; but he displayed great energy in the subsequent settlement of Zululand, and his conduct of the Sekukuni campaign has been already characterised in this journal as a most happy combination of daring and caution, and as one of the neatest expeditions ever executed. The Major-General whom Sir G. Wolseley superseded held the temporary local rank of lieutenant-general when he won the battle of Ulundi, but he was not confirmed in it when he came home; and the reward of the G.C.B. which Sir Garnet Wolseley received may be considered by many persons as sufficient recognition for the pursuit and capture of Cetewayo, the settlement of Zululand, the domination of the Boers, and the capture of the Lulu Mountain. The pay and allowances to which allusion has been made can in no degree be considered as part of a reward, handsome as they were—over £9,000 a year—but they certainly left no room for complaint on the score of want of liberality. There can be no doubt but that Captain O'Shea meant to imply that Sir G. Wolseley had been ill-treated because his rank had not been confirmed, in accordance with the custom in like cases. Mr. Childers, however, disposed of the supposed custom most effectually. Since 1854 there have been no less than forty-four cases of officers being allowed temporary rank for the convenience of the Service and for command, and in no instance was any of the officers so serving promoted to the rank permanently, under the clause of the Warrant under which Sir Garnet Wolseley's friends claim his rank for him. Men like Sir Colin Campbell and Sir Hope Grant were among the officers of that class, and no exception was made in their favour, but, as we now learn, Sir Garnet Wolseley has made a distinct "claim" in writing. The word "may" is treated as if it meant "shall," and the Warrant is to be interpreted as if it were executive and imperative, whereas Lord Herbert struck out the word "entitled," to show that the officer who was allowed temporary rank superior to his actual service rank had no right to demand to be confirmed in the higher position when his work was over. Mr. Childers says he is called upon to reverse the decisions of his predecessors for the last 26 years, and that he is taking the opinion of lawyers on the new construction of the Warrant; but we would say that it is for Mr. Childers to make a precedent, if there be a case for it; and that if his predecessors had ruled otherwise for thrice twenty-six years he should, nevertheless, without hesitation, ask the Commander-in-Chief to depart from the custom of the Army in regard to Sir G. Wolseley, if he be satisfied that the rewards given to him are not adequate, and if he be convinced that the services rendered by him in South Africa were of such conspicuous and exceptional magnitude as to raise him above the level of the General officers to whom the rule, from which he seeks exemption, had been rigorously applied.

We have repeatedly urged the desirability of instituting an exhaustive series of steam-trials, in order to obtain data by means of which alone the numerous phenomena attributed to the screw-propeller can be solved. Little, however, appears likely to be done, until failures such as have followed in the trials of the Iris, Northampton, Superb, and other vessels, shall compel the Admiralty to listen to our arguments. In the case of the Northampton, the failure was and still remains ignominious, and might have been avoided, had our suggestions been carried out. In the Iris, the first set of screws designed at the Admiralty were found to be of too great diameter, and had, in consequence, to be reduced. This has led to screws of too small diameter being supplied to the Northampton, and it would consequently appear that those who design screws for the Navy know little concerning the action of those instruments of propulsion, as was recently admitted by one high in authority at Whitehall. The reason is clear. The screw is made a secondary consideration, whereas it should be the first. Ancient opinions, in many cases negligently taken up, have repeatedly had to be abandoned, in the face of the inexorable logic of the facts disclosed by modern scientific research; and in the present instance, the old assumption that the screw should be of the largest diameter possible has had to be abandoned, in the face of the results secured in the Iris. This has sadly disconcerted our designers of screw-propellers, who have thus been deprived of their recognised custom, having nothing left to go by. The fact is that the art of propelling vessels by means of the screw has progressed in the most empiric manner, and may be pronounced as one simply governed by rule-of-thumb. It has never been developed by truly scientific induction. The ship has invariably been designed to look ship-shape. A hole has then been cut in her run, but care has always been taken not to interfere with her lines, the dimensions of the orifice being made dependent on the shape and dimensions of the deadwood. Into this aperture a screw of the largest diameter possible has been introduced. In vessels driven by twin-screws, the shafts have in like manner been brought out at the most convenient places, so as not to interfere with the location of the machinery, or the internal arrangements of the Naval architect, and in the Iris were brought out well forward, to admit screws of the largest diameter possible. All this has been done by rule-of-thumb, by eye, or by guess-work. Having ascertained, after the ship had been designed, what space had been left for the screw to work in, its diameter has been determined by the dimensions of that space, and the custom has prevailed of then applying a certain ratio of pitch and surface area to the diameter thus empirically determined. Such a mode of procedure has naturally been productive of numerous failures. By the merest chance, the screw has in some cases been found to suit the vessel; but, as a general rule, the waste of power is enormous. This arises, as we have before demonstrated, from the fact that the screw is designed, not for the ship, but to fit in a certain space, instead of the ship being constructed to receive a screw in every way adapted to her requirements. To ascertain how this can be done, we strongly urge the Admiralty to abandon the old assumption that the best possible form of blade remains yet to be discovered, and to start on a new course, by organising steam-trials to obtain sufficient data not only to reconcile all existing mysteries, but also to determine the law governing the so-called phenomena of the screw, so as to formulate a rule or rules to determine the relative dimensions of the various parts and attributes of the propeller with mathematical precision. Such a rule should be both philosophically, mechanically, and mathematically accurate, and when once correctly formulated, would prove of inestimable value. If we are right in assuming that the old and generally adopted custom of designing screws at haphazard, according to the space left for them to work in, is at fault, and that this is the real cause of our very numerous failures in the past, the Admiralty can have no valid excuse for turning a deaf ear to our arguments. The course we advocate as the right one to be pursued favours no individual interest. We simply show the nature of the mistake which has been made in the past, and point to the rational means by which it can be remedied in the future. We have seen the Northampton ordered to a distant station with defective propellers, because the resources of the Admiralty to improve them had been exhausted. The Iris was a failure in the first instance, and even now can scarcely be called a success, considering the enormous sum of money it has cost to remedy her defects. The Superb is also said to be a failure. Such fiascos are truly a disgrace to the country, when compared with the great successes achieved by French, Italian, and other foreign Naval Constructors. The waste of public money which these failures entail is also incredible. For the sake, therefore, both of efficiency and of economy, we once more advocate exhaustive steam-trials.

Lord Fortescue's remarks on the physical training of candidates for commissions were—pace those who complained that he unsettled the minds of those who purposed entering the Army—beneficial and to the point. At the same time, we thoroughly endorse the opinion of the Duke of Cambridge, which was in effect that, from a physical point of view our officers are extremely good. The inference which his Royal Highness wished to be drawn was that, such being the case, there was no need to stimulate athleticism in candidates for the Army. Lord Fortescue, anticipating this argument, urged that it did not follow because our officers were athletic already they should not be made more so. The point is, can or ought anything to be done to place the active, intelligent, but only fairly educated lad on an equality with the mere book-worm, the crammed reservoir of facts and formulæ. It may be that too much of an idol has been made at our public schools of athleticism; but it is very certain that moral, physical, aye, and intellectual qualities, are, as regards candidates for the Army, too much sacrificed to mechanical knowledge. Owing to the radical and theoretical principles adopted of late years, the young officers of the Army are by no means of as "good form" as formerly. This does not apply to certain corps d'élite, but it is certainly true as regards ordinary Infantry regiments of the Line. The general tone of the Army has not deteriorated in a marked degree, because the traditions, the old tone, and the old officers, still exercise an influence over the youngsters. As, however, those who are now oldsters disappear, and those who are now youngsters become oldsters, the deterioration will gradually but surely make itself apparent. Naturally, this must be the case, for within the present system of competitive examinations any clever costermonger's son can get a commission. For ordinary regimental duties, gentlemanlike manners and habits, an active frame, and the moral qualities which fit a man for command, if combined with the ordinary education of a gentleman, are of far more value than a well-crammed mind without the other requisites named. It is not necessary that the commander of a company or battalion should be a great mathematician; nor, indeed, is there any advantage in his being so. For the Artillery, the Engineers, and the Staff, it is otherwise; but our topic is not officers required for special duties, but the ordinary regimental officer. We profess to want to get the best men, but the test applied is fallacious. The great mathematician may be a snob and a weakling, but he is given a commission in preference to an active, well-bred, high-spirited young gentleman, who is well educated enough to pass muster in society, but much prefers riding, shooting, fishing, boating, cricket, and football, to history or science. Among practical men, there can be little doubt who would make the best officer. We, therefore, should be glad to see adopted any scheme by which the flank of the stupid Chinese system of open competition could be turned. As to Lord Morley's assertion that the examination for the Army is merely a test of good average intelligence, it is so palpably incorrect and absurd that it is scarcely necessary to contradict it. When, however, we come to a consideration of the steps to be taken to carry out the idea of giving marks for skill in manly exercises, some practical difficulties present themselves. It, however, by no means follows that they are as great as represented by those who maintain that everything is for the best in this best of all possible worlds, or that they cannot be overcome. If marks were given for athletics, it is tolerably certain that a comparatively small proportion of those 800 who compete for every 100 commissions would strive for marks by this means. It certainly is not desirable that lads should be kept longer than they are at present loafing about London. There is, however, no reason why the athletic competition should take place either in London, or at the same time as the literary examination. Indeed, there are excellent reasons why the latter should not be held in London. As to the argument that a competition in athletics would place the poor at a disadvantage with the rich, it is obviously fallacious, for the poor lad could go in for walking, jumping, running, and swimming, while the richer candidate might elect riding. But, as a matter of fact, almost every gentleman's son could, at little cost, obtain some tuition and experience in riding, and it is highly desirable that the great bulk of our officers should be gentlemen's sons. Again, the argument that training for an athletic competition might prove injurious to health, will scarcely hold water in the face of the general experience of our public schools. Besides, there is no reason why the minimum standard should be very high. Perhaps, however, the best plan would be to give no marks for skill in athletic sports, but to require every candidate to pass a certain test examination in them, so that men physically not well qualified for the Army might be excluded. An athletic competition might, in short, be made an adjunct to the medical examination. In the House of Lords, several speakers deprecated discussion on the subject; yet it is one worthy of discussion, and Lord Fortescue received strong encouragement to persevere, in being virtually told that when public opinion demanded the change asked for by him, it would be conceded. We trust, therefore, that the public, and especially the Military public, will speak their minds on the subject, and not allow the latter to remain shelved in a War-Office pigeon-hole.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, taking advantage of the ships under his orders being assembled at Portland preparatory to the exercising cruise at sea, had the whole of the officers and fleetmen of the Coastguard landed from the several ships, for inspection on the Naval parade-ground at Portland, on Saturday last. Captain H. F. Nicholson, of the Penelope, was in command of the brigade, with Lieutenant Almack, of the same ship, as adjutant. Lieutenant Lindley, of the Audacious, was in command of the 1st Battalion, and Lieutenant Heathcote, of the Valiant, of the 2nd Battalion. The total strength was 804 officers and men. The Duke of Edinburgh on his arrival on the ground was received with a Royal salute by the batteries drawn up in line. He first inspected the ranks, after which several manœuvres and exercises were gone through, including a march-past, review exercise by battalions, cutlas exercise, advance in line, &c. The men have never before been brought together in a similar manner, and an opportunity was afforded of showing the remarkably fine body of men of which the Coastguard Force is composed. The precision and accuracy of their movements at this inspection proved the thoroughness of the early training they had received afloat before they joined the Coastguard, and is a further proof as to the great value of the force as a reserve of seamen for the Royal Navy.

The Duke of Edinburgh will, it is rumoured, leave the First Reserve ships at Berehaven, whence he will go to the West Coast of Ireland to inquire into the relief work, while the ships under his command will proceed to Vigo with the Channel Squadron, under the orders of Rear-Admiral Hood. We have reasons to doubt the correctness of this rumour, as we are assured that this step was not contemplated when the Duke of Edinburgh hoisted his flag on board the Hercules, and the appointment of a flag-lieutenant would hardly have been needed for the passage from Portland to Bantry Bay.

The Mediterranean Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., consisting of the Alexandra, Téméraire, Thunderer, Rupert, and Invincible, arrived at Leghorn last Saturday morning, and found the Cygnet at anchor. The Monarch has left Malta to join the squadron. The Invincible and Rupert left Leghorn on Tuesday, the former for Spezia and the latter for Genoa. The Alexandra, Téméraire, and Thunderer left on Thursday, the two first for Spezia and the Thunderer for Genoa. The Helicon joined the flag on Sunday morning from Civita Vecchia. A great many officers are at Florence, and many have visited Pisa. The rumours of combined action between the English and French Fleets in the Mediterranean are certainly premature, for the Squadron is still carrying out the programme of the cruise recently given in these columns, by which it was arranged that the ships should leave Leghorn this week for Genoa.

It is generally rumoured that there is a probability of Prince Albert Victor again joining the Bacchante, although his late shipmates did not expect to see him return to them. The benefit he received from his sea-going cruise is said to be the reason for his again going afloat for a short time before joining the Military Academy.

Lieutenant Rumsey, R.N., is about to proceed to the Volta to take up an appointment as Commissioner for the district. He has been granted one year's leave of absence, at the expiration of which period he will be placed on the Retired List if he desires to retain the Commissionership.

The recent discussion on the system of education of naval cadets in force on board the Britannia appears to have induced the Admiralty to give the young gentlemen something more practical than mere schoolboy studies mixed with a little theoretical seamanship, as the course has been termed. On Monday the cadets were sent for a cruise in some of the training brigs belonging to the boys' harbour training ships, with directions that they were to remain cruising in the Channel for the week, weather permitting. It would be well to have at least one brig constantly employed in taking a certain number of the cadets for cruises in the Channel.

We understand that broadside firing, the guns being directed by electricity, is about to be tried in the ships of the Channel Squadron, and upon the report received of this new system will depend its adoption in the Fleet generally.

The misunderstanding between the Governments of France and Cochin China appears to be in abeyance for the present, Russia being allowed to take the Chinese Empire in hand all alone. There was some idea of despatching some additional gunboats from the French ports to the China station for the better protection of Saigon and the French possessions in the vicinity; but only one vessel, the Mytho, has been sent out, with a few additional troops and munitions of war.

The Russian Admiral Lesovsky is expected to arrive at Alexandria about the middle of this month to join the volunteer cruiser Europe, in which he will take passage to Vladivostock, to assume command of the Russian Fleet in those waters.

In confirmation of our statement last week that there is no foundation for the assertion made by a contemporary that Rear-Admiral the Prince of Leiningen was offered a command and refused it, we may now give the following particulars:—Before the late Government was out of office his Serene Highness was promised the post of second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, which is now held by Rear-Admiral Somerset, and Mr. W. H. Smith left a letter on record in the office in which the promise was noted. The Prince had previously sought for employment, but it was considered inexpedient to give him a home command while H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh was also in command, and as it is necessary to have sea time to qualify it became important for the Prince of Leiningen to get it. It is true he had not served in an ironclad, and, indeed, Admiral Somerset had but a very short experience of that class of ship. No one could question the qualifications as a sailor or the professional skill of the Prince. When the change of Ministry took place, the Prince renewed his application at the Admiralty; but Lord Northbrook declined to be bound in any way by his predecessors, and informed his Serene Highness that he had made up his mind to give the post of second-in-command of the Channel Squadron to Rear-Admiral Somerset. The representations which were made and the wishes which were expressed did not alter the First Lord's decision. It is not because he is a cousin of the Queen, but because he is a deserving officer who has served the country gallantly and well, that we think the Prince of Leiningen should have some consideration shown to him by the Admiralty.

A commanding officer of a gun-vessel on the China station has lately instituted an order that all officers' cabins are each morning to be inspected by the senior lieutenant, who is to report them as "clean." Although the cabins may be little larger than piggeries on model farms, the officers have resented the implication that they "pig it out" in their little dens, and the order has led to correspondence which has found its way to the Admiral.

We are glad to hear that Commander Vernon Anson has so far recovered from his recent illness, that he will probably be discharged from Haslar Hospital and resume the command of the Dasher to-day.

Several Members of Parliament are, we are glad to see, getting a little restive at being unable to gain any definite information as to what is likely to be done on the Marine question. It is true that the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the matter did not take place so very long ago, but their report has been before their Lordships for some time, and the whole corps and the Navy is kept in suspense as to the probable result. It is argued that it is unfair to be in a hurry for the information, as the question is so important that their Lordships cannot see their way to coming to a decision all at once. That is just the very reason why it would be well for the report of the Committee to be laid on the table of the House, for the question is so important that it would be far more satisfactory to the nation if the department received a little outside assistance and advice, instead of leaving the whole question to be dealt with by a departmental Committee and a Board of Admiralty, some of whom have only just come into office. Why should not that report be produced? That is the question to which so many members require an answer.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., was at Mauritius in the Euryalus on July 1, and was to be at Tamatave on the 13th inst.

The Admiralty has awarded the Naval pension of £50 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Commander William Coles on the 24th ult., to Retired Commander Thomas M. Campbell.

Arrangements will be made for paying off the Flora in the autumn, when Ascension will also be "re-commissioned," it being believed by those in authority to be of very considerable service, although an independent M.P. objected to its retention when the Navy Estimates were discussed. If that Member will read Captain Colomb's "Greater Britain," he may change his ideas as to the value of such spots as Ascension.

The Royal United Service Institution has recently been presented with a large model illustrating the new system of working heavy ordnance, invented by Mr. G. Fawcus, of North Shields. The model consists of a platform, with two intersecting lines of grooves and rails, one outside and the other inside the trucks of the bogies in which the slide is fixed. The motions of the bogies are co-ordinate, governed by conic sections, the slide working all round the compass within the smallest space possible. To apply this mode of mounting and working guns to Naval ordnance would enable three guns to be worked on the forecastle, where at present but one pivot-gun can be used; but as the adoption of this invention, or even its trial, would interfere with Elswick inventors, some time will elapse before it is heard of afloat.

Rear-Admiral Stirling was at Esquimault in the Triumph on June 10, having the Pelican in company. The remaining ships of the command are distributed in watching over the British interests on the South American coast.

Lord Ramsey, in his able speech on the early education of Naval officers, seems to have omitted reference to the present unsatisfactory mode of examining midshipmen in seamanship when passing for lieutenants. It is notorious that the class of certificate given to young officers on these occasions, and on which much of their future depends, is almost entirely a matter of chance, owing to the varied composition of the different examining boards. The attention of the First Lord of the Admiralty may well be directed to the anomalous nature of this state of affairs, which often injuriously and unfairly affects the prospects of these young officers, and is not a good test of their capabilities.

Major-General John Henry Stewart, of the Royal Marines, died at his residence, at Walmer, on the 3rd inst., in the 59th year of his age. General Stewart entered the Service in 1838; served in the Syrian campaign in 1840, and was present at D'Jouni, the storming of Sidon, and bombardment of St. Jean D'Acre. He commanded a battalion of Royal Marines in Ireland in 1867 and 1868. By the death of General Stewart, Colonel H. W. Gwyn, Commandant of the Portsmouth Division of Royal Marines, will be promoted to the rank of Major-General, and an Aide-de-Campship to the Queen becomes disposable.

We stated last week that Colonel Adair was about to be the subject of a special Order in Council, giving him "prospective advantages." By this order, now issued, Colonel Henry Adair, Commandant of the Royal Marine Artillery, goes on the Reserved List, with the understanding that on the first vacancy occurring through death or otherwise on the fixed establishment of General officers, Royal Marine Artillery, he is to be promoted to the vacancy, with the pay of a General officer, but is to be borne as supernumerary.

Colonel Second Commandant H. W. Mawbey has been appointed Commandant of the Royal Marine Artillery, in succession to Colonel Adair, removed to a Reserved List by an Order in Council, dated the 28th ult.

In consequence of the appointment of officers of the Royal Marines to the Indian Staff Corps, it has been decided to offer 18 commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry to candidates at the approaching examination for admission to the Royal Military College. Applications for commissions should be made without delay.

Captain H. B. Isaacson, R.M.L.I., has been appointed Assistant-Governor of the Liverpool Prison.

"A Layman," whose letter on the Royal Marines we published last week, considers the article in the Times on the Royal Marines much to the purpose, and is surprised that our technical judgment has taken exception to it. If "A Layman" will read the latter part of our article on which he expresses surprise, he will find that we agree with the spirit of the article in the Times to which he refers, viz., that the Light Infantry should be turned into Artillery, instead of reducing the Artillery to Light Infantry, as proposed. The "exception" of which he speaks was both fair and just to the Light Infantry branch of the corps, and was taken in order to remove from the public mind an erroneous impression that must necessarily have been created on several points by the specious wording of the Times' article, which excessively lauded the Artillery at the expense of the Light Infantry, particularly on the most important question of gunnery qualification of the officers and men of the Light Infantry, which, we conceive, our observations put in a fair and proper light.

We are glad to see that the uneasy feeling with regard to the administration of the Royal Patriotic Fund, which has for a long time been fed by disquieting rumours, has at last found expression in the House of Commons, and Baron Henry de Worms is entitled to the gratitude of the Services, for having called public attention to the ominous silence which prevails in official quarters on this matter. It is well known that a Committee, appointed by the late Government to enquire into the question, has made a Report about it; and instead of finding, as might have been expected, that the Patriotic Fund Commissioners eagerly demand the publication of this Report, in order to show the admirable manner in which they do their work, we cannot but observe the manifest reluctance that seems to be felt to let the public know anything at all about it. Not only does this Report seem to have been suppressed, but no accounts have been presented for the last year or two. It is plainly the duty of those entrusted with the administration of large funds, contributed by a charitable public, to give the utmost publicity to these transactions; and if all be right, it might reasonably be expected that they would court the freest criticism. Unless a work of this kind is open and above-board, it is very apt to check the springs of benevolence, and this is a result which cannot be contemplated by the Services without regret and protest. If there is no truth in all the unpleasant rumours afloat, let the Report of the Committee be published to silence them for ever. If, on the other hand, there is some ground for the doubts that have arisen, it is even the more important that we should know the worst, and that a remedy should be found for whatever is unsatisfactory in the conduct of this great charity. Baron de Worms's question in the House was peculiarly opportune at this moment, when the public are called on to raise a sum of something like £20,000 for those left destitute by the Atalanta calamity. We sincerely hope that the Lord Mayor and those who are responsible for the due appropriation of this new fund will take care that not one penny of it shall be handed over to the Patriotic Fund Commissioners, until they have purged themselves of the charge of extravagant administration by the fullest publicity being given to their operations.

From an official report just issued, we learn that the Baltic flotilla of revenue steamers belonging to Russia has been embodied in the coast defence, and furnished with torpedo appliances. The flotilla consists of 12 steamers, armed with 4-pounder guns, the crews being provided with Berdans and revolvers. The cost of the flotilla last year was 180,222 roubles, which was not excessive, seeing that since the institution of the revenue service in the Baltic the customs' receipts have increased yearly by 2,500,000 roubles. The officer in command of the flotilla is Rear-Admiral Scot, a descendant of one of the many Scotch officers that entered the Russian Navy in the reign of Catharine.

The Morskoi Sbornik, the journal of the Russian Minister of Marine, contains a translation of Mr. Donald Currie's recent lecture at the United Service Institution on "Merchant Cruisers." The discussion on the lecture will be translated and published in the next number of the journal. Already, although the Sbornik has only been out a a few days, the statements of Mr. Currie have provoked a controversy in the Russian Press, and it is probable, we understand, that his lecture will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of officers at the Naval Club at Cronstadt.

The invidious and indefensible practice of some newspapers, when, in describing trials in which officers of the Navy or Army are in any way implicated, as "Military" or "Naval" "scandals," should not be followed by respectable journals. The persons who figure in a trial of this sort which is attracting a good deal of notice can scarcely be said to belong to the Army, their connection with it being very slight indeed; and yet there are great posters to be seen with "Military Divorce Case" in large letters stuck up at the bookstalls.

The King of the Hellenes, having waited in London till the Berlin Conference had finished its deliberations, is now anxiously making his way from capital to capital, whilst his people prepare for war. He may find hostilities raging, or at all events, imminent, when he reaches Athens. No one, perhaps, would be more averse from war than King George, but war must be made if the Turk stands firm, and the means of turning the Moslem out of Epirus and Thessaly are not as strong as the wish to do so. It certainly strikes ordinary observers that Christian Europe is not displaying Christian charity, or any other Christian virtue, in dealing with the Sultan. The Powers do not insist on the performance of any of the stipulations in favour of Turkey, but they press home the fulfilment of all those which are against her. There is not a semblance of justice, fair-play, or honesty in the conduct of Christendom towards the Sultan, and it will be strange if good comes out of all the evil we are working.

The death of Lord George Paget has scarcely attracted the attention in the Press which one would have thought his services and his position would have secured for such an event, and it has been observed that the Head-quarters Staff was not represented at his funeral. We are sure that it was from no want of personal respect or good-will, for although he was not what was called a popular man, Lord George had sterling qualities, and had many fast friends. His cool courage in action was worthy of his name, and there are men now living who speak with admiration of the way in which he covered his retreat—rather a skedaddle, as it was—of the remnants of the Light Brigade, and of his behaviour in command of the Cavalry at Inkerman ere Lord Cardigan came up, when they were exposed to a heavy fire in covering the advance of the French. He was in command of the English cavalry at Tchernaya, where they were only in observation, and he was spoken of in high terms by General D'Allonville, for the activity and ability he displayed when he was detached to take charge of the force at Eupatoria. At the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny he was anxious for service, and was named for a command, but for some reason or other he was passed over, and it was not till some years later he was appointed to the Umballa district. As Inspector-General of Cavalry he was distinguished by quickness of perception, and he handled the division at Aldershot with ability and intelligence. It is understood Lord George Paget was a candidate for further employment at the time of his death.

A Royal Warrant has been issued, dated the 24th ult., cancelling that of March 14, 1845, so far as relates to the allowance for clothing and appointments for the regiments of Household Cavalry, and providing that in future the "regiments of Life Guards and Horse Guards shall be supplied with arms, accoutrements, clothing, equipment, saddlery, and necessaries, in accordance with such regulations as may be issued from time to time by our Secretary of State, provided always that the patterns of such arms, accoutrements, clothing, equipment, saddlery, and necessaries be submitted for our approval, and that no changes, either in design, shape, or quality, be made therein without our sanction."

It having been deemed expedient to amend the Regulations relating to forfeiture of rewards to recruiters for recruits passed into the Service. Article 639 of the Warrant of May 1, 1878, has been cancelled, and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—"639. Rewards shall not be allowed—(a), For men who enlist fraudulently; (b), for men who enlist while belonging to our Reserve Forces; (c), for men who enlist while belonging to the Militia, without obtaining a proper discharge therefrom; (d), for men who enlist after having been discharged on account of misconduct from our Regular Forces, or Royal Marines, or from any portion of our Auxiliary Forces when subject to military law; (e), for men who enlist after having been discharged from our Regular or Reserve Forces, or Royal Marines, and have concealed such former service or enlistment. But no refund of the rewards shall be required unless the inadmissibility is discovered and notified to the recruiter within three months from the date of attestation, except when such recruiter is a pensioner, or a member of the staff of a brigade depôt, or of the Militia or Volunteer permanent staff, in which cases the period within which the rewards are recoverable shall be extended to six months."

Owing to the nature of the reference to the Departmental Committee now assembled at the War Office, the advisability of the separation of the mounted and dismounted branches of the Artillery is not likely to be inquired into. The German Government separated the field from their so-called fortress artillery, abolishing the system which still finds favour with us, of keeping the officers of the two branches on one large, interchangeable list. This system has been condemned by good authorities, and it seems unfortunate that an opportunity for inquiry should be lost.

We do not mean to pronounce any opinion ex cathedrâ on the merits of the different sorts of trenching-tools, content to leave to uninterested and competent authorities the decision on what must be decided, after fair trial, upon the actual fitness of the articles, and not upon assertions or statements of opinion; but we must say that when Lieutenant Baillie Hamilton stigmatised as "useless" the implement selected, after much deliberation, by those charged officially with the business, he assumed a serious responsibility. We long ago called the attention of the authorities at the War Office to the Rice bayonet and to the United States' experiments, not to commend any special invention, but to insist on the necessity of attention and observation; and since that time, many clever people have come forward with various forms of trenching-tools, some being very earnest in their efforts to combine the pick and the spade, and others seeking to combine the bayonet and the shovel with the rifle itself as a handle, but no combination tool, so far as we know, has been satisfactory; and the selection by the War Office of the Roumanian spade, which was tested at Plevna and has been adopted by the Germans and Austrians, although Lieutenant Hamilton disapproves of it, appears to be based on good grounds. Well may we exclaim, with Hudibras,— whether it be in the form of gun or trenching-tool, for the Roumanian spade and its friends will be possibly exposed to much invective. But in its lightness and simplicity, it has obvious recommendations. It hangs well also, and is easily detached. The blade and handle are in one, and it is of a convenient length. It must not be supposed that infantry generally can be loaded with tools for permanent entrenchments—that must be the work of special corps; but infantry should be provided with the means of throwing up breastworks in the field, and the Roumanian spade seems well adapted for that purpose. Some 2,000 or 3,000 of these spades will be issued at once, and if they answer the expectations of the authorities they will be introduced generally as Service-equipment. We have nothing to say against the tools which Lieutenant Hamilton recommends, or the valuable suggestions of Captain Prior, in the lecture which we read with so much pleasure and profit, but are stating facts, Sir Donald Stewart exhibits a commendable brevity, candour, and honest statement of facts in his despatch relative to the battle of Ahmed-Khel, Afghanistan. It is evident that this battle, in which our forces were not very greatly outnumbered by the enemy, was the most desperate and critical of the war. Private letters of the gallant General who commanded acknowledge it to have been a most "touch-and-go" affair. It only lasted one hour in its intensity, from 9 to 10 a.m., but in that time the Afghans exhibited unprecedented pluck, rushing up to the guns, to be mowed down in hundreds. The two batteries in action had expended all their case-shot, and had to retire 200 yards for want of ammunition, though the ground in front of them was strewn with the bodies of the desperate Ghazis. The enemy had a good many mounted men, and Sir Donald Stewart says their "horsemen turned the left, now strengthened by a squadron of the 19th Bengal Lancers, and, pouring down two ravines which formed a V, struck the Lancers before they could charge, forcing the leading squadron to the right and rear, while the 3rd Goorkha regiment formed rallying squares." So critical was the position of our Army that the General states that the two companies of infantry forming his personal escort had to be sent into the front line of fire. He does not add, what is now well known at Simla, that he and his staff drew their swords to fight for their lives. It is evident that the General was not pleased with the handling of some of the cavalry, for he only mentions the commanders of two out of the three regiments engaged. And yet the 19th Bengal Cavalry suffered very severely. Of six European officers who went into action, four were wounded. Colonel Yorke was slightly wounded. The adjutant's charger (Lieutenant Young) bolted into the midst of the enemy, and the officer, when brought down with a gunshot wound, was hacked with knives and dangerously cut and stabbed in six places. Lieutenant Stewart Gordon was wounded, and Lieutenant Harry Massy (brother to Brigadier-General Dunham Massy) was also wounded in the side by a spear-thrust. Lieutenant Massy cut his assailant down in single combat, and, refusing to retire with the wounded, continued in pursuit of the enemy. He was again engaged, under General Palliser, with the 19th Bengal Lancers on April 22 at the battle of Shatez, near Ghuznee. General Palliser has mentioned in his despatches the good service done by the squadron under Lieutenant Massy. Private telegrams state that he was again engaged on June 26 in the action and pursuit near Padkow, where his commanding officer, Colonel Yorke, had again so narrow an escape, having had one bullet through his helmet and his eye-brow grazed by another.

In addition to the Albert medal, personally presented by the Queen, the gold medal awarded by the King of Sweden, and the Royal Humane Society's medal, George Oatley, gunner's mate and drill instructor at the Naval Reserve Battery at Peterhead, has also received a purse containing more than £160, subscribed by some who desired to mark their estimation of his gallantry at the wreck of the schooner Augusta in February last. It is gratifying to see merit thus recognised.

No less than seven commissions are at present sitting at the St. Petersburg Ministry of War, deciding questions connected with the Russian Army. The Army Reorganisation Commission is considering the reorganisation of the under-officer service, the adoption of a new kind of lance for the Cossacks, and the issue of larger-bore rifles for the irregular troops. A second commission is engaged with the reorganisation of the Siberian Cossacks, a third with the erection of hospitals for Cossacks in Siberia, a fourth with the increase of non-commissioned officers in Poland, a fifth with improved hospital appliances for the Army, a sixth with the substitution of the combustible called heracline for powder in guns, and a seventh with improvements in the mountain artillery of Turkestan.

We note several improvements in the new edition of Hart's Quarterly Army List. An index has now been added, the matter in the volume has been rearranged, and two tables of contents are prefixed—one showing the order of arrangement, the other being an alphabetical reference. In the case of many regiments, the Cape war services are given, and the work throughout shows that care in compilation and revision for which these volumes have ever been remarkable.

Mr. Trevelyan made a bad start in his attack on the surplusage of General Officers on the Active List, for the very figures on which he based his accusation that our Army is extravagantly generalled were incorrect. He asserted that we had 626 Generals. Mr. Childers asserted that there are only 342. We cannot agree with all that was said by Mr. Trevelyan's opponents, but as a matter of fact, we have now practically the system which Mr. Trevelyan advocates. The Active List may be said to consist of only those Generals who are holding active commands, all the others being, though nominally on the Active, really temporarily on a Reserve List. We do not suppose that even so virulent and ignorant an enemy of the Army as Mr. Trevalyan will contend that £450 a year is too much for a General, who after forty years or more is unemployed. Certainly this sum cannot, if compared with the pensions of civilians, be deemed excessive. What economy, then, would be effected by the change which he advocates? Besides, in compliance with the provisions of the Warrant of 1877, the number of Generals on the Active List is being gradually reduced to 200. A comparison between the German and British Armies is simply silly, for the conditions of service and the circumstances of each vary so largely, that no one not utterly ignorant and presumptuous would institute the comparison. As to Mr. Trevelyan's proposal that honorary colonelcies should be abolished, due regard being paid to vested interests, we cannot imagine a more unjust or objectionable proceeding. An honorary colonelcy is only an honourable fiction by which a good-service reward of £1,000 is given to deserving Generals as some compensation for, on an average, more than 40 years' service in all parts of the world. Besides, to abolish these honorary colonelcies before the death of every officer now serving would be a breach of faith, seeing that the chance of the prize is one of the inducements for men to try and obtain commissions. We suppose, however, that whatever may be the justice of the case, the Army before long will have to submit to another instalment of confiscation.

A French Parliamentary Committee has just come to the following decisions with regard to the Army, after having consulted the commanders of the various army corps. It was unanimously voted that infantry captains should be mounted in time of peace, as well as of war; and that when a captain has no horse, he must do his duty on foot. 2. It was unanimously voted that only the captains of the active battalions are to be mounted. 3. That all the captains fatigued by age or ill-health, and not capable of riding, be placed in the depôt, or the fortress battalions; and that every year the General inspecting shall call upon the mounted captains to take the command of companies 250 strong, and handle them in loose order on broken ground; those captains incapable of commanding a company under fire, on horseback, to be placed in the depôt or fortress battalions. 4. The captains to be mounted at the expense of the State. 5. Captains who desire it, to be allowed to purchase their own horses, subject to approval. 6. If a captain purchases a horse with his own money, it remains his property. 7. The Committee is not in a position to decide whether the horses in question should be French or Arab. 9. If the Budget does not permit all the captains to be mounted, the Government can begin by mounting two captains per battalion, and mount the others afterwards. 10. The Committee consider that no money down should be allowed to the infantry captains for the purchase of saddle, bridle, &c., but that the infantry captains, like the cavalry captains, should receive a supplement of 15 fr. per month. 11. As the officer of the Special Military School and the Military School of Infantry learn to ride, and can continue to take riding lessons in garrisons where cavalry are quartered, the Committee is not of opinion that the horses of the captains should be employed for the instruction of lieutenants and sub-lieutenants. 13. The Committee consider that the horse and trappings belong to the function, and not to the officer, and therefore that the commanding can place horse and trappings at the disposal of the officer who commands the company in the absence of the captain. This question has long been under consideration in France, but there is little doubt but that General Farre and the Parliament will adopt the recommendations of the Committee, in spite of the expense. It is agreed upon all hands that no officer on foot can command 250 men, which is the war establishment of the French company. The passing from one flank to another, from the rear to the head of a column, the posting of pickets, and skirmishing, imply an amount of fatigue and exertion which no officer not mounted could stand. We may observe that the late War Minister strongly objected to the fourth battalions receiving captains unfit for hard work in the field, insisting that one battalion should be as good as another. If the recommendations of the Committee be carried out, this rule will be departed from, and it will be impossible for the War Minister to count on the active co-operation of the depôt and fortress battalions in case of need, for if the more youthful and vigorous captains cannot command their companies unless mounted, how will this feat be achieved by captains worn out by age and enfeebled by infirmity? It would be much better to draft all such captains at once into the territorial army, where officers are required, than to retain them in a Service for which they are not totally fit.

SIR,—Before there is too hasty a giving-away of the other portions of Afghanistan now in our occupation, it would be well if public opinion were better informed on the important uses which that country can be made to us, beyond the giving to us a more defensible border-line. Why is there no mention of the benefits it would be to us, as the rulers of India, to have the place for quarters for our white soldiers, and so to deliver them out of the hardships of living in the plains? Hitherto there has been no satisfactory alternative for the residence in the plains, because, though we had the whole long range of the Himalayas to choose from, yet in point of fact, the excessive steepness of these mountains make it an impossibility to quarter soldiers there in any place in sufficiently large numbers either to satisfy discipline or to fulfil the other needs of the Service. Cashmere, it is known, would have satisfied all these needs, but this we had years ago (not knowing its value) sold out of our power to its present owner, and now comes this Afghanistan in its place, situated on the borders of Cashmere, equally good in climate, and although now not so fertile, yet quite capable of being made so, under our peaceable rule; Afghanistan having, moreover, the additional advantage of being situated in the exact spot where it will best suit us for strategical reasons to have our Army quartered. All our best military authorities on the subject are agreed that there is no necessity, on military grounds, for having all our white troops quartered actually in the plains of India. The native troops can do nearly all this part of the work, now that the spread of railway communication and telegraphs enables instantaneous transmission of tidings, and the speedy despatch of white troops from such a principal depôt as the one now spoken of to be in Afghanistan; and if the depôt placed there were made as commodious as the many advantages of the place would enable it to be, it would cause Indian military service to become no more burdensome than it is anywhere else, to the great relief of the country which has to supply the army for that place, not to speak of higher considerations. But those higher considerations, in the case of a Christian people, demand that we should not continue the old wasteful sacrifice of our soldiers in a country in which they never can become acclimatised after once it has become possible to do anything else. So long as there was no help for it, there was nothing to be done but to bear the disadvantage the best way we could; but now that a safe alternative offers, it will be shameful for the nation not to make use of it; and it should not feel discouraged, even though the authority of some good old veteran be quoted, to the effect that in times gone by our soldiers in India did great things, when they were not so coddled as we now want them to be. Much has certainly been done in accordance with this proper wish, to ameliorate the condition of the British soldier in India, but, unfortunately, as yet, but little has been done in the way of giving relief in the one great want, namely, cooler places of residence. Some eighteen years ago, eleven millions sterling were spent in giving improved barrack accommodation in the plains. The barracks were good, but no goodness in them was able to cover—or diminish even—the hardships which those born in a temperate climate have to endure in the hot weather in the plains of India; the money, if not actually thrown away, certainly never caused the soldier to become any better reconciled to India. Again, something is annually done by sending sickly soldiers to the hills, and some women and children are sent there as well; also, kindly disposed persons, under the sanction of the Government, have opened out homes in the hills for soldiers' children in addition,—all being, so far as they go, of great use, but all still falling immensely short of what the requirements of the case demand, the great mass of our British soldiers in India (with their women and children) are as yet undealt with. What is needed being—and it could be done with perfect safety to our rule—that three-fourths of the English Army in that country, as distinct from the Native—be permanently quartered in the hills, and Afghanistan now offers all that we want for this. Sir, it is men like me, whose duties keep them nearly all their service in the plains, who are especially able to speak of the hardships to the soldier of barrack-life in the hot weather, —much more so to the women and children! It is only men who have been thus on the spot, and who are, or were, in contact with the many grievous and sorrowful trials incidental to the ordinary life of our Army in India, who can describe what it has to go through during that long period every year, in the time we call the "hot weather;" and the having to witness this, without being able to render any material relief, is in itself a distress of no light kind, and which trials, you are to remember, are trials peculiar to the plains of India, as distinct from those of any other climate where the soldier has to live, with the exception, perhaps, of one or two small places, such as Aden or Hong Kong. It is these which press upon our English Army so heavily, not to speak of the losses made by deaths and invaliding to England. Is it, then, to be wondered at if they who have seen much of this, should feel hot at what often appears to them like supineness in their own country people, in permitting this to go on, whenever—as now—there seems a possibility of investigating it. Now that railways, and the place, Afghanistan (of good climate, and within easy reach for quartering our white soldiers in), are all provided,—in fact, all the essentials for curing this lamentable evil belonging to our occupation of India,—it will be too bad if we do nothing. This Afghanistan, which so many now in a helpless way profess that they do not know what to do with, under the mistaken idea that it will only be a heavy expense for us to keep, without being of any good in return! Why, Sir, nothing that it costs us will be too much for us to pay! It is just one of the most fortunate things—among the many other fortunate things—which has happened to us in that land, thus to have Afghanistan given into our hands, for it will supply our greatest want, viz., a healthy lodging-place for our English troops. The various appliances now at our disposal, which give us the power to make a rapid transfer of troops to any place within the limits of those communications, now makes such distant localisation of troops to be possible, which before—having regard to the safety of our rule—could not be done. And it is now time that a beginning should be made in utilising whatever means that offer themselves as likely to reduce the strain upon the white portion of our Army in India; one or more settlements or depôts should be established at proper places in Afghanistan. I do hope to see signs in public opinion of a greater perception of the value of Afghanistan.—I am, &c.,

THE CAPTURE OF GHUZNI.

In his despatch reporting the engagements at Ahmed Khel on April 19, and in the neighbourhood of Ghuzni on April 23, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Donald Stewart, commanding the Field Force, says:—"I now desire to bring to the notice of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and of the Government the excellent services performed on this occasion by Brigdr.-Gens. R. J. Hughes and C. H. Palliser, C.B., on whose brigades the brunt of the action fell. The resolute firmness with which the key of the position was held by the 2nd Sikh Infantry and the 3rd Goorkha Regiment, under Brigdr.-Gen. Hughes' direction, when the right of the line was pushed back, is evidence of that officer's soldierlike qualifications. The judicious and vigorous manner in which the cavalry was handled in the open country on the right of the line reflects the highest credit on Brigdr.-Gen. Palliser, C.B. I am much indebted to Gen. R. Barter for the rapidity with which he brought up his brigade, a distance of six miles from the rear; although the infantry portion of this reinforcement did not come into action until the enemy were in full flight, the celerity of advance enabled me to follow up our success by making a forward movement of importance. To Lieut.-Col. E. F. Chapman, deputy adjt. and qrmr.-gen., I am much indebted for the able assistance which he uniformly affords me in his responsible office. My thanks are also due to Major A. G. Handcock, assist.-adjt.-gen.; Capt. A. Gaselee, assist.-qrmr.-gen.; and Capt. L. T. Bishop, deputy-assist.-qrmr.-gen., whose zeal and activity merit high commendation. At the most critical period of the action I observed Capt. Gaselee encouraging the retiring line, and I believe that the gallant example he set the men, by advancing towards the enemy and calmly shooting down some of the most forward of them, had the very best effect on the soldiers. I have to thank Col. A. C. Johnson, R.H.A., commanding the Royal Artillery, for the admirable disposition of the batteries under his command. The arrangements for the immediate care of the wounded reflect the highest credit upon Deputy-Surg.-Gen. A. Smith, C.B., P.M.O. with the force; and the exertions of the subordinate medical staff deserve my warmest acknowledgments. To Capt. E. M. Larminie, R.E., officiating commanding R.E., Major C. Cowie, R.A., comy. of ordnance, and Capt. R. F. C. A. Tytler, deputy-judge-advocate, I am much indebted for the ready assistance they have always given me in their respective departments. Capt. Tytler has, moreover, been most useful to me as an orderly officer in action. My aide-de-camp, Capt. N. R. Stewart, Bengal S.C., has performed his duties to my entire satisfaction; and I desire to thank him as well as Lieut. J. E. Dickie, R.E., superintendent of army signalling, for their services in conveying my orders. To Capt. W. V. Ellis, provost-marshal, as well as to Capt. W. A. Lawrence, general transport officer, and his assistants, I am under special obligations; for it was by their unremitting attention that the enormous mass of transport animals and followers was kept under control during the action. As the baggage and trains were massed within a short distance of the fighting-line, any confusion among them would have been most calamitous, and would probably have led to a serious disaster. Owing to Capt. C. F. Hughes, Bombay S.C., deputy-assist.-comy.-gen., having been incapacitated by an accident, the duties of Principal Commissariat Officer with the force devolved on Lieut. B. L. P. Reilly, Bombay S.C. My thanks are due to him, and the officers temporarily employed with the Commissariat Department, for their exertions in supplying the force under very difficult circumstances. To Major C. B. Euan Smith, C.S.I., the Chief Political Officer with the force, who was in attendance on me during the action, I am under the deepest obligations. The tact displayed by this officer in his relations with the chiefs and people with whom we were brought into contact, calls for my warmest approbation. Major Smith was ably assisted in his important duties by Major R. C. R. Clifford, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, an excellent and energetic officer of great merit, who also acted as my orderly officer during the day. The attentions to the wounded of the Rev. T. L. J. Warneford and the Rev. Father J. Allen, Roman Catholic chaplain, deserve special mention. It affords me much pleasure to bring their services to notice. I would submit, for the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the names of the following officers commanding batteries and regiments, whose services have been brought prominently to notice by their respective brigadier-generals:—Major H. de G. Warter, commanding A-B, R.H.A.; Major Sir J. W. Campbell, Bart., commanding G-4th, R.A.; Major J. A. Tillard, commanding No. 6-11th, R.A.; Major N. H. Harris, commanding No. 11-11th, R.A.: Lieut.-Col. C. S. Maclean, commanding 1st Punjab Cavalry; Col. T. G. Kennedy, C.B., commanding 2nd Punjab Cavalry; Lieut.-Col. J. J. Collins, commanding 2-60th Rifles; Lieut.-Col. G. R. Hennessy, commanding 15th Sikhs; Lieut.-Col. J. W. Hoggan, commanding 25th Punjab N.I.; Lieut.-Col. J. J. Boswell, commanding 2nd Sikh Infantry; Col. H. H. Lyster, V.C., commanding 3rd Goorkha Regt.; Lieut.-Col. A. Copeland, commanding 19th Punjab N.I.; Capt. L. F. Brown, R.E., commanding No. 10 Company, Sappers and Miners; Lieut. P. Haslett, R.E., commanding No. 4 Company, Sappers and Miners; Lieut. A. Davidson, 2-60th Rifles, commanding the Lieut.-Gen's. escort. The following officers are also favourably mentioned by Brigdr.-Gens. commanding brigades:—Major M. H. Nicolson, Bombay Infantry, brigade-major, 2nd Infantry Brigade; Lieut. F. Stevenson, 19th Bombay N.I., Capt. E. B. Bishop, 3rd Goorkha Regt., orderly officers to Brigdr.-Gen. Hughes. The gallant behaviour of Lieut. and Adjt. S. Watson, 59th Foot, and of Sub-Lieut. H. M. Twynam, 59th Foot, is brought specially to notice; Major G. C. Bird, 1st Punjab Cavalry, brig.-major, Cavalry Brigade; Lieut. W. E. G. Forbes, 2-6th Royals, Lieut. A. C. Batten, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, Lieut. C. Hoskyn, R.E., orderly officers to Brigdr.-Gen. Palliser, C.B.; Major J. R. B. Atkinson, Capt. D. S. Cuninghame; Lieut. H. A. Deane; Ressaldar Mir Alam Khan, 1st Punjab Cavalry; Major F. Lance, Capt. J. H. Broome, Capt. J. R. Campbell, Ressaldar Lahrasaf Khan, 2nd Punjab Cavalry; Capt. G. M. Abbott; Lieut. E. Bruce, Ressadar Jowahir Singh, Jemadar Mahomed Khan, 19th Bengal Lancers; Jemadar Gulab Singh, Capt. R. Corbett, R.H.A.; Capt. H. T. Lugard, R.A.; Capt. C. F. Call, R.E.; Capt. R. Chalmer, 2-60th Rifles, Brig.-Major, 1st Infantry Brigade; Lieut. C. Hope, 2-60th Rifles, Lieut. R. E. W. Copland-Crawford, 2-60th Rifles, Lieut. R. E. Golightly, orderly officers to Brigdr.-Gen. Barter.

On Tuesday, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge inspected the boys of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, in the grounds of the institution, and afterwards presented the prizes won during the past year. The boys assembled shortly before eleven o'clock, and were formed up in line in six companies, with the colour party in the centre, while upon the right was the battery of three-pounders, with proper gun detachments, and a company of pupil teachers and schoolmasters, the whole being under the command of Col. Battersby, who was assisted by Major Thompson. After an inspection of the ranks, a march-past followed and a number of movements were executed. The drill was brought to a close by an advance in slow time and a Royal salute. The company then adjourned to the large hall of the asylum. The chair was taken by the Duke of Cambridge, who was supported by Field-Marshal Sir C. Yorke, Lord Airey, Lord W. Paulet, Sir R. Wilbraham, Sir D. Russell, Gen. B. Walker, Gen. Napier, &c. The proceedings were opened by Col. Battersby, the commandant of the asylum, who, in an exhaustive report, stated that whereas in 1871 there were 700 men and boys in the Army who had been educated there, this year there were 1,098, or about two battalions of the home establishment. Of this number 4 were officers, 3 warrant officers, 317 non-commissioned officers, 227 musicians, 327 boys, and only 186 privates, while 34 were unaccounted for. On Jan. 1 last 1,020 of these were reported as good or very good, 27 as indifferent, 15 as bad, and only 2 as very bad. During the nine years there had been 993 admissions to the school, of whom 840 had been dismissed after passing full time there, 683, or about 80 per cent., enlisting into her Majesty's Service. This was a valuable contingent, as their average of desertions was only about the quarter of a boy per cent. per annum. Referring to the changes in the management that had taken place in his term of office, the colonel said that whereas before they educated 458 boys at a cost of £12,240, they now did the same for 484 boys for £10,144. The commandant also referred to the question of half-time, which had answered well, as was proved by the examinations. With regard to removing the asylum into the country, he was decidedly averse to the proposition. The Duke of Cambridge then presented the prizes to the boys, who were loudly cheered as they received their awards. The Duke of Cambridge, who was received with cheers, said that it had given him great pleasure to appear at their annual distribution of prizes, and see what had been done. The report of Col. Battersby was most creditable to himself and to those under him, and to the school generally. From what he had seen on that day and on other occasions, the establishment had improved in a manner that at one time he would not have believed possible. Many, perhaps, thought the changes that had taken place went beyond what was necessary, but the result did not justify that view. This was a valuable institution, and was to be looked upon as a useful school for good non-commissioned officers; and if they could only extend the premises here and at the school in Ireland, as well as the area from which to obtain boys, it would be a still further advantage. The half-time system had seemed to work well, as they had learned trades without losing their other education. Without entering into any controversy as to the desirability of moving the asylum into the country, his Royal Highness expressed his personal disapproval of such a course. In conclusion, the Duke gave a few kindly and genial words of advice to the boys, and paid a tribute to Col. Battersby, whose good service was about to be rewarded by his promotion to more important duties. The Commander-in-Chief then left, the boys singing the National Anthem. The boys and students celebrated their annual festival on Wednesday, but the adverse state of the weather greatly militated against the enjoyment of a numerous attendance.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Col. Owen Williams, Royal Horse Guards, asked the Secretary of State for War, on Monday, whether it was not an acknowledged fact that very serious deterioration had taken place among the non-commissioned officers of the regiments of the Line; whether he had any evidence before him which tended to show that this deterioration was the result of Lord Cardwell's reorganisation scheme of 1871; and whether, having regard to the great exigence of the case, her Majesty's Government contemplate taking immediate measures to remedy the existing state of affairs; and, if so, when would those remedial measures come into operation. Mr. Childers said:—In reply to the hon. and gallant member, I must distinctly decline to admit the allegation that it is an acknowledged fact that very serious deterioration has taken place among the non-commissioned officers of the regiments of the Line, or that this is the result of Lord Cardwell's reorganisation scheme of 1871. In many respects the non-commissioned officers of the Line have improved since 1871. They are better educated, as shown by the last general annual return presented to Parliament; and I find that, as to punishment, the number reduced to the ranks is less. But they are, on the average, made non-commissioned officers at a younger age than in 1871; and, in the opinion of many commanding officers, some of them have in consequence not sufficient experience. It is also alleged that greater difficulty than formerly is found in retaining their services, although I find that 71 per cent. of the serjeants who completed six years' service in 1879 elected to continue with the colours. Under these circumstances, although questions affecting the non-commissioned officers are intimately connected with the general question of the organisation of the Army, which we shall have to consider on the report of Lord Airey's Committee, I have arrived at the conclusion that this is the most pressing branch of the subject, and we shall take it up without delay. Perhaps I may add that both the German and French military departments are experiencing the same difficulties as ourselves with respect to non-commissioned officers, and that the problem, in the face of the social circumstances of the present day, seems universal in Europe.

CHILI AND PERU.

According to the Panama Star and Herald, the blockading squadron has not yet renewed hostilities against Callao since the ineffective bombardment of the 10th inst. The fleet, it is reported, has been reinforced by the arrival of the Admiral Cochrane, probably to relieve the Blanco Encalada, flagship of Admiral Riveros. The foreign fleet seems to prefer Ancon as a harbour to the less secure and less wholesome anchorage off the mouth of the Rimac, where it has lain since the closing of Callao. At their request the Chilian admiral has modified his original order prohibiting traffic on the Ancon line under penalty of having the trains fired on; and a single train daily each way is permitted to run, for passengers only, thus allowing the foreign squadron to communnicate with Lima and its legations. The Star and Herald of the 10th ult. says:—"We publish herewith a copy of a telegram received at the office of the Consul-General of Peru in this city on the 5th inst.:—'Payta, May 29, 10.3 a.m.—Yesterday the Government received a despatch, viâ Ica, which is as follows:—Tacna, May 23.—Yesterday the enemy's advanced guard attacked us. We expect a definite result to-morrow. We must triumph. It will be very convenient if Leiva attacks, according to instructions, the rearguard of the enemy. An express has been sent to Leiva; will your honour hurry it forward?—Solar.' Later telegram.—'Payta, May 29, 6.15 p.m.—In this moment the telegram goes forward which contains explanations concerning the affair of the provisions. Its tenour is clear, and no difficulties can be offered. To-day favourable news has been received from Tacna. The advanced division of the Chilians has been destroyed. The telegram indicates that the definitive combat will take place the following day, and that our triumph will be complete.—Paz Soldan.' From the above it is evident that the opposing forces at Tacna have at last met, and a Peruvian victory is probably the result."

The Anglo-Brazilian Times of June 14 says:—"A telegram to the Government says Arica was stormed and taken by the Chilians on June 7, after a stubborn resistance, and with severe loss on both sides. All the garrison of 2,000 men were either killed or made prisoners. The Peruvian monitor Manco Capac was sunk and its crew captured."

"C. J. S." writes:—"Will you allow me to add a few words to the remarks made by 'Scribe' in your impression of the 12th ult. about these non-commissioned officers. No one connected with or knowing anything of official military life will dispute the fact that they are amongst the most useful non-commissioned officers in the Service, and by far the most difficult to obtain. The right-hand supporters of the colonel and the adjutant, ard, in most cases, their confidential clerks and advisers, the whole of the responsibility of office work rests entirely with them, a responsibility much greater than that borne by any military staff clerk. Their educational qualifications, the extent of knowledge required to carry on their many duties with satisfaction to those for whom they are working, render them deserving of some consideration. I think that on first appointment they should receive the rank and pay of quartermaster-serjeants—their work is, to say the least, equally as important—with progressive increase until the pay reaches that of a regimental serjeant-major, the rank to be equal to but junior to his. A cook serjeant receives 6d. a day, in addition to his pay, immediately on appointment; a provost serjeant receives 6d. or 8d. a day for doing little else but walking about with a big stick. Why should not an orderly-room clerk, who has to work and read hard, especially in these days when intricate Discipline Acts, Army Circulars, and General Orders follow each other in quick succession, have some slight inducement held out to him?"

"RESERVE OF OFFICERS."

"Esprit de Corps" says:—"Noticing, as I do in the Gazette to the Reserve of Officers, the names of several men who have been put through the Bankruptcy Court, and others who left the Service under pressure, some for rather serious offences, would it not be as well if some clause were inserted in the Royal Warrant of July 6, 1879, so as to guard against this admission of the few black-sheep who may bring discredit upon the whole body?"

PURCHASE OFFICERS.

"An Old Soldier" writes:—"Before Parliament meets again, all captains of forty years of age who obtained their rank before the abolition of Purchase will be compelled to retire. Mr. Childers has promised to give his views on the report of Lord Airey's Commission, when moving the Army Estimates next year. Would it not be as well to suspend compulsory retirement, as regards captains, until the same time? It would then, perhaps, appear that the public ought to have a vested right in retaining the services of officers who may have distinguished themselves on active service, or on whom large sums may have been expended by the Government in special training at the Staff College."

A division of the Corps of Commissionaires is now established at Liverpool, the chief office being established at the India Buildings, Water Street; and a communication is about to be established with the Lancashire Telephonic Exchange, whereby every employer in connection with that company will be able to command the services of a commissionaire at a few moments' notice.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). A large meeting of Conservative electors was held at Berwick-on-Tweed on Wednesday evening, when it was agreed that Capt. Milne Home should be invited to stand for the vacant seat, in opposition to the Lord-Advocate. Capt. Home has consented to come forward. It is understood that Capt. the Hon. O. Montague is about to retire.

3rd Dragoon Guards. The Irish Times states that the regiment "will leave Island Bridge Barracks, Dublin, for England, and will be quartered in Manchester, Liverpool, and Birmingham."

6th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Sprot obtains his troop, vice Capt. Montgomery, retired upon half-pay. Lieut. Massey is reported to have greatly distinguished himself with the Ghuzni Field Force, and to have dearly won the Victoria Cross on two occasions.

4th Hussars. The funeral of Gen. Lord George Paget took place on Tuesday. The body was conveyed in a hearse and four from Berkeley House, Farm Street, Mayfair, to Hampton, arriving there at a quarter past eleven o'clock. The mourners and friends proceeded from London by train, reaching the church shortly after the hearse. On the coffin being removed from the hearse and borne into the church, the cocked hat and sword of the deceased were placed upon it, the deceased's valet walking in front carrying his late master's decorations on a cushion. Immediately after the coffin followed the mourners, namely, Lord Clarence Paget, Gen. Lord Alfred Paget (brothers of the deceased), Earl Sydney, the Earl of Sandwich, Hon. F. Cadogan, and Mr. C. Heneage (brothers-in-law), Earl Cowley, Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor, Lord Templemore, Lord Ebury, Mr. Montgomery, Mr. Cameron, and many others. The Earl of Strafford was unable to attend, and his only son is in Norway. The service for the burial of the dead was impressively read by the Rev. James Barrow, M.A., the vicar of Hampton, who afterwards concluded the service at the grave. The late lord's remains rest with those of his first wife, who was buried there in March, 1858. The outer coffin was of plain, polished oak, the brass plate on the lid bearing the following inscription:—"General Lord George Augustus Frederick Paget, K.C.B., Colonel 4th Hussars, Officer of the Legion of Honour, Knight of the Order of the Medjidie; born March 16, 1818; died June 30, 1880."

6th Dragoons. The death is announced of Major-Gen. T. R. Crawley, lately commanding the regiment. Gen. Crawley, who was 62 years of age, entered the Army in 1834, served in the closing operations at the siege of Mooltan in 1849, and was also present at the battle of Goojerat, and at the pursuit of the Sikh Army to the Jhelum. His name was prominently before the public some years ago in connection with what was known as "the Mhow court-martial," and the death of Serjt.-Major Lilley. He retired upon half-pay in Dec., 1868, and became major-general, Oct. 1, 1877.

8th Hussars. The Morning Advertiser says:—"The death of Lord George Paget has been followed within a few days by that of another officer of the Light Cavalry at Balaklava—Lieut. H. Harrison. He was promoted to a commission as cornet (his commission bearing date Nov. 5, 1854), in recognition of Inkerman. Lieut. Harrison was a regular attendant at the annual Balaklava banquet."

9th Lancers. Head-quarters and one troop had returned to Cabul on the 1st ult., with Gen. Roberts's force, from the Logar Valley. The correspondent of the Bombay Gazette says:—"The troops are well and hearty, particularly those recently out with Gen. Roberts, and it speaks well for the stamina of the men of the 9th Lancers that, during the whole time they were out on the late expedition, they had not a single man on the sick list. But then the 9th Lancers are a splendid body, and reflect credit upon the whole British Army. After all their recent sufferings, they are still fit for any service." Capt. Shearburn has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

10th Hussars. According to the Lahore paper, the 10th are rather exercised as to what is going to be done with them. In one quarter they are told that they will go home during the ensuing winter, in another that they will have to wait until the trooping season of 1881-82, and that, meanwhile, they will go to Umballa. Two officers in the regiment have just been offered appointments. Lord Ogilvy on the staff of Lord Ripon, and Lord A. F. Compton, both on Lord Ripon's staff and on that of the new Viceroy of Ireland, but neither officer has been able to leave the regiment, as it is so short of officers, five being at the front and two at the Depôt.

12th Lancers. The retirement of Lieut.-Col. Le Quesne was the occasion of a demonstration unique in its way and highly noteworthy. The officers, as usual, gave a farewell dinner to their retiring "chief," and the non-commissioned officers, headed by the regimental serjeant-major, formed themselves into a guard of honour to receive him at the mess-house. They were drawn up on horseback fully equipped, and on the arrival of the colonel presented arms, the band playing the while. Lieut.-Col. Le Quesne was no less surprised than pleased at the compliment, and in expressing thanks for the honour done him, he said that during the 24 years he had been with the regiment, there was no moment of which he was so proud as that one. He spoke feelingly of his leaving the regiment, and the parting from his non-commissioned officers, and shaking hands with Regimental Serjt.-Major Saunders, he wished it would be taken as shaking hands with the whole of them. Next morning, notwithstanding a heavy shower of rain, the non-commissioned officers formed themselves up again, at the railway-station, as a guard of honour, and received the colonel, who left Secunderabad amidst the hearty cheers of his men. Capt. Mansel-Pleydell has been granted leave from India to England for three months, on urgent private affairs.

18th Hussars. Major Joice has been appointed paymaster of the 27th Brigade Depôt at Leicester, and leaves the regiment, to his own regret and that of all ranks.

Campbell from the A Brig., R.H.A., to the 11th (Garrison) Brig.; Col. A. W. Twiss from the 8th to the 7th (Garrison) Brig.; and Col. R. Curtis from the 10th (Garrison) to the 4th (Field) Brig.

Col. C. E. Oldershaw, C.B., has been posted to the 2nd Brig., on reverting to regimental duty from the staff of the 2nd Irish Auxiliary Artillery District.

Lieuts. G. E. A. Woods, 9th Brig., and W. H. Williams, 5th Brig., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Lieut.-Col. J. F. Betty, 1st Brig., has arrived in England from India to take up his appointment as chief instructor at the School of Gunnery.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs:—"The announcement that Sir John Strachey will be succeeded by Major Baring was unexpected, but has made, on the whole, a favourable impression. Major Baring had an ample opportunity of making himself acquainted with Indian affairs during his four years' service as private secretary to Lord Northbrook. He is known to be an able man, and great hopes are entertained of his usefulness in the important office to which he is now appointed. The change will not be made till the autumn." Major Baring has arrived in London, preparatory to taking up his official duties.

The Times of India has the following:—"The appearance of Gen. Stewart's despatches affords us an opportunity to make amends to G-4 Battery, R.A., for an injustice unwittingly done them by one of our correspondents at the front. The battery referred to took part in the action of April 19 near Ghuzni, and our Cabul correspondent who described the engagement from information supplied to him by those who were present, does not seem to have been informed of the work done by this particular battery. Sir Donald Stewart says:—'The gallantry with which the batteries maintained their ground till the last moment, and the orderly manner in which the retirement was effected, reflect the greatest credit on officers and men;' and the commanding officer of G-4 Battery, Major Sir J. W. Campbell, Bart., is one of those officers whose services are brought prominently to notice. That the praise is thoroughly deserved will be admitted when we say that during the heat of the action this battery was at least fifty yards to the left front of the Horse Artillery, and fired after the latter had retired. The field battery had the enemy within twenty yards of them, in fact, some were in rear among their waggons. As the Horse Artillery were in a good position on a height, while the ground necessitated the Field Artillery being lower down, those in rear probably thought that all the smoke and noise were made by the battery nearest to them, but such, as Gen. Stewart's despatch shows, was far from being the case."

The death is announced of Capt. T. Briggs, qrmr., on the Half-pay List. Capt. Briggs obtained his commission Sept. 23, 1862, and only lately retired.

The death is announced of Major W. B. E. Ellis, 8th Brig., which occurred at Attock. Major Ellis, subsequent to the fall of Sebastopol, served in the Crimea from early in October, 1855, until the evacuation in June, 1856, and was employed in the destruction of the docks of Sebastopol. Commanded a detachment of Royal Artillery from Nov. 16, 1858, to March 16, 1859, with the Berar Field Force, and was employed to destroy by mines one of the strongholds of the Rohillas in the Deccan. Served throughout the Abyssinian campaign from Dec. 13, 1867, first in a field battery, of which he brought most of the horses from India to Zoola, but becoming supernumerary, was subsequently employed as Provost Marshal, and in the Land Transport Train. Commanded a division of the Train in the highlands of Abyssinia for several months. Held command of the Train at Sooroo and at Addigerat, two important posts on the line of communication to Magdala (mentioned in despatches, medal). He entered the Army, Aug. 14, 1851; and became major, July 5, 1872.

The Duke of Cambridge, in promulgating a report by the Commandant of the School of Gunnery upon the gun-practice of the Royal Artillery for the past year, directs the particular attention of officers to the several points commented upon, and trusts that the valuable information thus afforded on so important a matter, will tend to a decided improvement in the exercise and practice of the guns, as well as to increased professional knowledge of the corps at large. The commandant, Col. F. M. Hastings, R.A., states that 15 batteries, Royal Horse Artillery, and 39 Field batteries had practised in the United Kingdom during the year, and of these 26 had the advantage of firing over land ranges with an increased number of rounds. The officers in command of batteries have evidently been zealous in their efforts to instruct their men, and in many instances there has been a great improvement in the practice over that of the previous season. The introduction of competition for prizes appears to have had a beneficial effect in the improved general efficiency of the non-commissioned officers and men. The most noticeable defect pointed out is the failure of time-fuzes, varying in some instances from 10 to 25 per cent., and in one case to 45 per cent. The Commandant infers that the instructions are not sufficiently attended to, and instances the case of a battery at Gibraltar which fired five rounds in succession blind, without altering length of fuze one inch, which he characterises as rule of thumb. The numerous blinds are frequently attributed to deterioration through age or exposure, but he thinks the conclusion is too often taken for granted, and that if advantage were taken of the instructions it might be found that the fuse was bored too long and struck out on impact. Many officers complain of wanting range-finders, which he hopes will form part of every battery's equipment, and be supplemented by a pair of good field-glasses. There are also many complaints of the uncertain results obtained from the range-finders supplied, showing either that they are imperfect or that the men using them had not been well instructed. The difficulty in moving targets has been in several instances pointed out; to obviate it one officer used white calico targets, which, though easily transportable, are objected to as offering a more distinct object to aim at than would have generally presented on service. Light canvas targets were under consideration. Sixty-two garrison batteries have practised in the United Kingdom and the Colonies, and the officers are commended for their zealous efforts to instruct their men, but a few of them state that some of their men had not had sufficient drill with the guns they were going to practise with. The Commandant remarks that no man should be allowed to practise who is not reported perfect in the drill. The numerous "blinds" referred to are said to be specially observable with the 7-inch segment shell. Ten of these also burst prematurely from unknown causes,—5 at Gibraltar, 1 at St. Helena, and 4 at home. The fracture of tubes, conjectured to be due to climate, was in some cases very marked. At Malta, 1,168 tubes were used to fire 974 rounds, showing nearly 20 per cent. defective; and at Gibraltar 11 per cent. were failures.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Times has been requested to state that at the time Col. Gordon resigned his appointment as private secretary to Lord Ripon he had no intention of going to China. Col. The Admiralty have sanctioned an exchange of divisions between the following:—Capt. A. H. des Barres, of Chatham Division, and Capt. R. P. Coffin, of Plymouth Division. Capt. des Barres, when a lieutenant, belonged to the Plymouth Division, and Capt. Coffin to Chatham, prior to his promotion.

The following lieutenants sailed for Bombay on the 25th ult., and are transferred to the Indian S.C.:—Lieuts. J. B. Woon and L. M. M. Hall, R.M.A.; C. H. Hayes and E. T. Paul, Plymouth Division; W. W. Taylor and C. H. Powell, Portsmouth Division; E. V. Goldsmid and H. C. Powell, Chatham Division; H. Farrant and Butler, R.M.A.

Major A. H. Ozzard, two serjeants, and four privates, R.M.L.I., and Capt. H. J. L. Norcock, Lieut. R. Denny, Lieut. W. J. Langford, a staff serjeant, and five serjeants, have proceeded from Plymouth head-quarters to Wimbledon Camp, for employment under the National Rifle Association.

The Lords of the Admiralty have approved of all officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Royal Marines serving in the first-reserve ships (except those on the coast of Ireland), in ships on the home stations, and in ships arriving at home stations which are not likely to be paid off, who have on Sept. 30 of each year completed two years' service in such ships, being relieved on that date, and that reliefs should take place on that date only.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded to Serjts. Robert G. Miller and Alfred W. Masters, of the Chatham Division, and Serjts. Edward Hore and George Huxtable, of the Plymouth Division.

On Thursday, Com. Price asked the Secretary to the Admiralty, in the House of Commons, whether it was the case that recruiting for the Royal Marine Artillery had been stopped or considerably restricted, and for what reason; also, whether the Government would give hon. Members an opportunity of considering the report of the committee on the reorganisation of the Marine corps during the present Session, before coming to a decision on the subject. Mr. S. Lefevre said, in reply, that the Admiralty in November last had suspended recruiting for the corps of Marine Artillery, but not in the larger Marine corps. It was not, however, to be presumed that the Admiralty had any intention of extinguishing such a valuable and distinguished corps. With respect to the departmental report on the reorganisation of the Marine corps, he could not promise to lay it upon the table of the House until the Board of Admiralty had considered it.

67TH REGIMENT. The following is an extract from brigade orders by Brigdr.-Gen. H. T. McPherson, V.C., C.B., commanding 1st Brigade, 1st Division, Cabul Field Force, published for information on April 14:—"The 67th Regiment having been transferred to another Division, Brigdr.-Gen. McPherson wishes to express his sincere regret at losing a regiment with which he has been so intimately associated since the advance from Ali-Kheyl on Sept. 29 last. The manner in which the regiment performed the arduous and somewhat anxious duty of protecting the immense string of transport animals laden with the ordnance and other important stores of the entire force reflected the highest credit on the training of the officers and men. It was a matter of pride and satisfaction to the Brigdr.-Gen. to have, with the assistance of the 67th Regiment, executed this convoy duty without the loss of a single follower or baggage animal by the hands of the enemy. The admirable shooting of the marksmen in clearing the hills of bodies of the enemy, who were threatening an attack on Oct. 7 at Charasiab, was duly brought to the notice of the Lieut.-Gen. Commanding the Force. On the difficult march over the Bala Hissar on the night of Oct. 8, the steadiness and silence preserved in the ranks exhibited a confidence that was most praiseworthy. During the expedition to Wata-Sung and Saroli and the crossing of the Cabul River, an attack was made on a forage escort, and the defence made by Capt. Poole with his company against what seemed overwhelming odds, is an incident of which the regiment may be justly proud, and Brigdr.-Gen. McPherson trusts that the skilful and gallant conduct displayed on that occasion will meet with due recognition. On Dec. 10, when the Koistan tribes were brought into action at Mir-Kariza, the dash and eagerness of the 67th to close produced the happiest result by gaining a formidable position strongly held with small loss, a result entirely attributable to the quickness with which they handled the enemy. The rapidity of the flank march on Dec. 11 testifies to the remarkable condition and marching power of the regiment. The exertions of the force on that day were well rewarded by its having the satisfaction of driving the Afghan leader (Mahommed Jan) and his hosts from the plain of Chardeh, and nothing more tendered to the success than the steady volley-firing of the 67th Regt. When the force was directed to withdraw from the heights of the Bala Hissar, on the 14th, their bearing during that delicate operation exhibited the best qualities of the soldier. For this their conduct throughout the siege, and the invaluable services rendered at all times, Brigdr.-Gen. McPherson offers his warmest thanks to Col. Knowles and all ranks of the 67th Regt."

Fifty-four regiments have yet to complete, viz., 25 in England and Wales, 9 in Scotland, and 20 in Ireland.

It is intimated that "her Majesty has been pleased to grant a Warrant promulgating revised regulations for the Militia. These regulations supersede all circulars and orders issued up to this date so far as they relate to or affect that force, excepting, those relating to commissions in the Army, 1880, and the portions of the Militia orders during this year's training which have not been included in those as now revised."

1st Surrey Artillery were inspected in Battersea Park last Saturday by Col. Waller, R.A., and though suffering under the disadvantage of wet weather, which effectually drenched every officer and man, turned out well. The muster was, we think, slightly less than that of last year, but the appearance and drill reflected much credit on Lieut.-Col. Hope, V.C., and his officers.

4th West York (Hull) Artillery. Replying to Mr. Norwood, Mr. Childers stated on Thursday that "the result of the inquiry held at Hull on June 25 into the proceedings of June 16 was that Lord Londesborough, the hon. col., whose resignation was withdrawn at my request and that of the Commander-in-Chief, went to Hull and notified, on the 5th inst., to the corps the decision that her Majesty had dispensed with the services of Lieut.-Col. Humphry and three other officers. Lord Londesborough has been requested to recommend a new lieut.-col. commandant and other officers for the present vacancies."

2nd Tower Hamlets Engineers passed a satisfactory inspection last Saturday by Col. Dawson-Scott, R.E., who has had many opportunities of noting the qualities of Lieut.-Col. Comyn's battalion in the engineering sheds and in the open. Like Col. Waller, with his auxiliary Artillery, Col. Scott's inspections of the Engineers are most searching, and it is therefore satisfactory to learn that he was much pleased with the East London corps, which had 373 men on parade compared with 304 last year.

5th Cheshire (Congleton) Rifles, according to their annual custom, held their camp in Somerford Park, the seat of their lieut.-col., Sir C. W. Shakerley, from the 21st to the 26th June. 760 of all ranks marched into camp on the first day, and of this number 715 remained throughout the week; the average daily attendance was 829. Col. Tyacke, commanding 18th Sub-District, held a brigade drill on the 24th ult., and inspected the corps on the following day, when there were 917 of all ranks present in camp out of a total strength of 927. This corps is much reduced in strength, owing to the detachment at Crewe (400 strong) having all resigned since April 1, as they objected to become part of a consolidated corps. The Staff officers present at the inspection were Lieut.-Col. Sir C. W. Shakerley, Bart., Major Greg, Capt. and Adjt. Wylie, 60th Rifles, and Surg. Beales. Qrmr. Garside was, most unfortunately, prevented by illness from attending the camp, much to the regret of all his brother-officers. Lieut. Toler, however, acted for him, and performed the duties in a most efficient manner. The hon. col., Gen. Sir R. Wilbraham, K.C.B., was present at the inspection.

2nd Essex Rifles, commanded by Lieut.-Col. S. W. Silver, were inspected on Saturday last by Col. Rose, 44th Sub-District. 535 of all ranks were present, which is an improvement on last year's total (469). A detachment of the regiment will proceed to Colchester on the 31st inst., under Major Ford.

London Rifle Brigade will be inspected in Hyde Park this evening by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, hon. col. The regiment sends a company to the Camp of Exercise at Aldershot on the 31st inst.

2nd London Rifles. Capt Thimm has obtained a field-officer's certificate from the School of Instruction, Wellington Barracks, and Lieut. Curtis a certificate of proficiency. The regiment will send 100 officers and men to Aldershot on Aug. 7.

9th (West) Middlesex Rifles have lost the services of Capt. Pennymore, formerly of the Coldstream Guards, who has been adjt. of the regiment for 20 years, and retires on pension. His successor is Capt. Daly, 7th Fusiliers.

15th Middlesex (London Scottish) Rifles formed a camp of instruction at Wimbledon on Saturday last, which has during this week been fully attended. Capt. Smail, 36th Foot, has been appointed adjutant.

19th Surrey (Borough of Lambeth) Rifles underwent inspection by Col. Dean-Pitt, C.B., of the Guildford Sub-District, on Saturday. Major Ray was in command, and there were about 600 on parade. Owing to the heavy rain, the inspection only lasted a short time.

21st Middlesex (Civil Service) Rifles were inspected last Saturday, in the Old Deer Park, Richmond, where they had been encamped during the week. The muster was not so large as last year, the addition of the smart and well set-up company of the Bank of England Rifles, in the neat dark green, with busbies, of the Rifle Brigade, only making up eight small companies. The drill, carried out under Col. Smith, Grenadier Guards, was smartly and correctly performed, and Col. Smith remarked that there were no points on which he could find fault. Lieut.-Col. Viscount Bury was in command.

22nd Middlesex (Queen's Westminster) Rifles will have a camp of instruction at Sandown Park from July 31 to Aug. 7.

26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks) Rifles, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Kennard, M.P., were officially inspected last Saturday by Col. Clive, Grenadier Guards. The present strength is about 1,000, of whom 864 were on parade.

28th Middlesex (London Irish) Rifles. This deservedly popular regiment never appeared to better advantage than at its inspection last Saturday by Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., when upwards of 900 officers and men turned out compared with 851 last year. Lieut.-Col. Ward was in command, and the gallant chief (the Marquis of Donegall), who has led the battalion since its formation, was present. Gen. Higginson spoke highly of the drill and muster, remarked on the silence in the ranks, and looked upon another occasion for the revival of that springy step which has been a characteristic of the battalion.

29th (North) Middlesex Rifles were inspected on Saturday last by Col. Logan, C.B., at Albany Street Barracks, the parade showing 675 of all ranks as against 699 last year. Lieut.-Col. Brown was in command.

37th Middlesex (G.G.B.) Rifles. A detachment will proceed to Aldershot, on Aug. 14, for eight days. A camp will be formed at Wimbledon to-day, and one for instruction at Hampstead on the 31st inst.

38th Middlesex (Artists) Rifles were inspected by Major-Gen. Higginson, on the Horse Guards Parade, on Saturday last. We had hoped to have seen a larger muster than last year. It was 15 less—640 compared with 655, but there were 140 absent with leave. Gen. Higginson expressed his entire satisfaction with the result of the inspection.

39th Middlesex (Finsbury) Rifles underwent their official inspection by Col. Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards, in Regent's Park, on Saturday. The "state" showed 795, as against 801 last year; and the drill, considering the swamped condition of the ground, and the fact that all the men were wet through, was very good indeed. Lieut.-Col. Radcliffe was in command.

46th Middlesex Rifles, under command of Lieut.-Col. Routledge, their indefatigable "Chief," attended divine service in Westminster Abbey on Sunday last, when the hon. chaplain, the Rev. Canon Farrar, D.D., preached the sermon. There were 420 on parade, the hon. col., Sir C. Russell, V.C., M.P., being present. The battalion will be inspected to-day in Regent's Park by Col. Logan, C.B.

The first detachments for the Volunteers' Engineer Camp will join at Chatham to-day, the tents being pitched in front of St. Mary's Barracks, and near the School of Military Engineering. The course of instruction for the first week is as follows:—Brushwood and its uses, hasty entrenchments, obstacles, gun-pits and epaulments, and stockades.

SIR,—To do full justice to the Purchase Captains in the matter of brevet promotion, all those still remaining who were superseded by the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers should, in the first instance, have their commissions as majors antedated, without back pay, to July 5, 1872, and be thus placed in their original order on the list. The action of the Royal Warrant abolishing seniority promotion by brevet should then be suspended, until every Purchase captain is promoted by seniority in his turn to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Should this scheme be brought to the notice of Mr. Childers, he might see that it is an advantageous way of reinstating a deserving body of public servants, who have been up to the present very hardly dealt with.—I am, &c., X.

The German General of infantry, Von Löwenfeld, died at Potsdam on June 29, in the 73rd year of his age. During the campaign of 1866 he commanded the Ninth Infantry Division, and distinguished himself greatly in the battles in the neighbourhood of Nachod.

ON May 15 we called attention to some points in connection with the loss of the Atalanta, which we think it well to repeat now that the Committee of Inquiry has actually commenced its sittings. We stated that Captain Stirling applied to the Admiralty not only for a reduction to be made in the spars of the ship, but also that water-ports might be cut in the upper deck to relieve the ship, in the event of her shipping heavy seas in the stormy region of the Atlantic, whither she was sent to cruise. Our statement that this was refused has since that date received confirmation, and we hope that this point may be especially inquired into by the Committee. The late First Lord of the Admiralty has taken an opportunity of declaring that it is his wish that the fullest inquiry shall be made into the equipment of the Atalanta, and the present First Lord can have no desire to see any disputed point not searchingly looked into. We therefore call with confidence upon the Committee to make it their duty to see to this matter, for it is one that needs inquiry. It has been too often the case, as we have before stated, for officers placed in command of ships of an experimental or special type to be not sufficiently consulted by the Constructor's Department when their recommendations for improving the qualities of the ships are handed into office. Naval officers have felt that those responsible for the design and equipment of a ship feel as though a slight were cast on their professional knowledge if a long list of alterations is submitted. This is perhaps but reasonable, and a due regard for economy would very naturally influence those who are more responsible for Naval expenditure than the officers of the Fleet, to narrowly scrutinise, and endeavour to cut down, all superfluous wants on the part of the Naval element, leaning in their decisions rather towards the Constructor's Department and the views of yard officials. But if it should be true, as we firmly believe, that the official request for the cutting of water-ports on the upper deck of the Atalanta was absolutely refused by the Constructor's Department, it will be plain to the minds of most Naval men that a great and grievous error was here committed. We have thus far alluded to the Constructor's Department as the responsible branch, because we know that the Board refers these points to the Department, and is mainly influenced by the decision recorded upon the suggestions which may be submitted to those holding the chief authority in that branch. It is only right that the heads of important departments should be allowed to influence the Board, and take the responsibility upon themselves in many cases; but in this instance it would appear that upon a question which must commend itself to all Naval officers as being at least reasonable — seeing, too, that the fullest confidence was felt in the seamanlike qualities of the late Captain Stirling — the Board allowed itself to be overruled by the civilian professional, and it will be interesting to ascertain who were doing duty at the Admiralty when the suggestion of Captain Stirling for the cutting of water-ports was received, and what steps the Naval element at the Board took to support the captain of the training-ship against the counter-views of the Constructor's Department. We have laid particular stress upon this matter, believing that the ship most probably foundered through her inability to relieve herself of heavy seas, shipped in fearful weather, and that her inability to so relieve herself was mainly due to the absence of water-ports on the upper deck. So far, the inquiry has been confined to the seaworthiness and stability of the Juno, a 26-gun frigate, well found in every respect, whose spar were those found best adapted to vessels of her class. But the old Juno, when renamed the Atalanta, is commonly credited throughout the Service as having been fitted with masts and yards belonging to an old 44-gun frigate, and consequently far in excess of the Atalanta's requirements. This is another point to which we desire to call attention, for, in the event of the Atalanta having been overmasted and oversparred, of what value can evidence be as to the stability and handiness of the Juno, when that ship was at sea with properly proportioned masts and yards and a spread of canvas, at all times proportionate to her displacement?

The vacancy created by the lamented death of Lord George Paget will be filled up by the appointment of Lieutenant-General the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald. The nomination will give general satisfaction, and command the approval of the Service. It would have been a grevious wrong had any technical objection been allowed to stand in the way of so distinguished an officer, whose duties as Private Secretary to the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief have been performed with the utmost credit to himself and advantage to the Horse Guards and the country. General Macdonald entered the Service, October 1, 1829; served in the Eastern campaign of 1854, as aide-de-camp to the Duke of Cambridge, including the battles of Alma (horse shot), Balaklava, and Inkerman (horse shot), siege of Sebastopol; sortie of October 26 (Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, medal with four clasps, C.B., Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He was conspicuous for his coolness and courage in the advance at the Alma, and in the midst of the hottest fire at Inkerman, when the Guards were fighting for the Sandbag Battery, he set a brilliant example of gallant composure.

Arrangements are being made with the authorities by Major-General E. S. Burnaby, M.P., for exhibiting the Swedish system of gymnastics in all the principal military centres in the United Kingdom. We may point out that the Swedish system of gymnastics is more complete than that of any other European country.

For months past a Committee has been sitting at the War Office to investigate the merits of different systems of micrometres, or range-finders. The secretary of this Committee is Captain H. S. S. Watkin, R.A., the inventor of the Watkin Range-finder. It may be remembered that a young German some time since submitted an instrument for measuring distances to the Military authorities at Chatham. Being resident in England, he had enlisted in our Army for the purpose of bringing his invention into notice, and failing to do so in one regiment, considered that he was committing no serious crime in joining another, the commanding officer of which he heard spoken of as a man who would help him. This man, having been made a prisoner and sent back to his old regiment, was tried by court-martial, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. He, we understand, has since purchased his discharge from the Army; and we may expect to learn that his range-finder has been adopted by the German Government, the war officials at Berlin, unlike our own, having, we hear, jumped at the chance of securing an idea of which such excellent reports had been furnished them from London.

Lord Chelmsford was offered the Plymouth command, we are told, but refused it. His Lordship is probably looking to the Madras Presidency.

We cannot ascertain that there is any foundation for the statement that a distinguished officer, now at the Horse Guards, is about to go to Ireland, in command of the forces there.

The thirteenth section of the German official account of the Franco-German campaign of 1870-71, has now been published by the Intelligence Branch of the Horse Guards, and includes details of the occurrences on the theatre of war in central France up to the reoccupation of Orleans by the German Army.

We understand that there will be, according to present arrangements, a review before the Queen at Windsor on next Wednesday, at which the Aldershot division will appear. The cavalry received orders to be in readiness a few days ago.

The new official quarterly Army List, which has been for some time in progress, will be published in course of the present month by authority, and will contain, among other matters, a gradation list of all combatant officers of the Imperial and Indian Armies. The war services of officers will not appear in the first issue, but it is hoped to include them in the next volume.

The appointments of Staff Officers of Pensioners at Perth and Freemantle, Western Australia, have been abolished. The appointments have been held by Colonel E. D. Harvest, half-pay, late 97th Regiment, and Lieutenant-Colonel C. Finnerty, unattached. The duties will be carried on temporarily at Freemantle by Assistant-Commissary-General A. R. Thompson, half-pay, late Commissariat and Transport Department.

Deputy-Surgeon-General J. A. Woolfryes, M.D., C.B., C.M.G., lately returned from the Cape, where he was employed in medical charge during the recent hostilities, has been appointed principal medical officer of the Portsmouth District, vice Surgeon-General C. A. Gordon, M.D., C.B., retired.

There will be a general parade and presentation of colours to the Cadets, by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, at the Royal Military College, at 11 o'clock, on July 15.

On Thursday night, Mr. Childers gave an answer to a certain Member which will, we hope, put an end to many foolish reports and fables. He said, "My hon. friend wishes to know what honorary colonelcies are held by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge, and what emoluments are attached to them. I find that the honorary colonelcy of the 10th Hussars is held by the Prince of Wales, who receives an emolument of £1,350; while the Duke of Cambridge has the honorary colonelcy of the Grenadier Guards, with a remuneration of £2,200. All the other colonelcies held by the Royal Family are purely honorary, and in fact the Duke of Connaught, when made colonel-in-chief of the Rifle Brigade, lost instead of gained by the promotion." The Secretary of State, however, has given rise to the belief that if he has his way, honorary colonelcies will cease in the Army of the future.

The answer of the Secretary of State to a question respecting the efficiency of the Serjeants of the Army was not satisfactory, and the reasons why it was by no means to be accepted, except in so far as relates to the promise to inquire, were ably set forth in a letter to a daily paper this week.

The latest news from China gives reason to hope that there will be no outbreak of war between Russia and the Celestial Empire. It was never believed by those who know the Chinese Government well that the ex-Ambassador to St. Petersburg would be executed, and the Court of Pekin has displayed unusual courtesy in the tone in which the reprieve is made known.

We are very glad indeed that Mr. Childers is going to apply his mind to consider the case of the Quartermasters. It has been a long time "under consideration."

The resignation of Lieutenant-Colonel D. R. Barnes of his appointment as Deputy-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the Cape, notified in the London Gazette of Tuesday, was due, we regret to learn, to ill-health, he having been invalided to England immediately after his arrival at the Cape to assume the duties of the position, to which he was transferred from the Hythe Staff as recently as March last. The work of the appointment is being conducted as a temporary arrangement by Major W. L. K. Ogilvy, 60th Rifles, pending the arrival of Colonel Barnes's successor, Lieutenant-Colonel B. M. Deane, half-pay, late 19th Regiment.

Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, G.C.M.G., was invested by her Majesty at Windsor Castle on Monday with the ribbon and badge of the Military Division of the First Class or Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and Major-General F. A. Campbell, R.A., with those of the Second Class of the Order.

We hear that the most profound strategists in Pall Mall—on both sides of the way—give up the Chili-Peru-Bolivia war as a bad job. The fight is mainly about guano; but the operations, as reported, are scarcely intelligible. Although the bombardments and blockades are patent facts, and the naval encounters have been resolute and bloody, the movements of the forces on land appear to be desultory. Will no one publish a good map of the country?

The appointment of Assistant-Adjutant-General for Recruiting at St. George's Barracks will become vacant early next month, by the promotion of Colonel J. Peel, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion. Colonel Peel was appointed in May, 1876.

Captain H. Geary, R.A., has vacated his appointment as Inspector of Warlike Stores at Hong Kong. Similar appointments are vacant at Bermuda and Halifax, N.S.

A step of promotion is due to the senior major and captain in the Army, consequent on the death of Major-General J. H. Stewart, C.B., Royal Marines, and a second will of course be accorded on the promotion of Colonel H. Adair, R.M.A., who is becoming a general officer by special arrangement.

The following is the result of the recent examination of officers for admission to the advanced class, Royal Artillery:—(1) Lieutenant P. A. MacMahon, 881 marks; (2) Lieutenant W. J. Clarke, 835 marks; (3) Lieutenant E. Ward, 627 marks; (4) Captain F. H. G. Cruickshank, 574 marks; (5) Lieutenant F. N. M. Skinner, 513 marks. These five officers are recommended for admission. One officer, index No. 5, obtained only 52 marks, failing in mathematics.

The appointment of principal medical officer at Gibraltar is falling vacant, Surgeon-General H. G. Gordon, M.D., being about to be retired from the 2nd prox.

Brigadier-General Sir C. C. G. Ross, K.C.B., Bengal Staff Corps, has arrived in England from India on leave of absence, and will not, we understand, return to his command on the Bengal Establishment.

A meeting of the Commissioners of the Royal Patriotic Fund was held at 5 St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square, on Thursday. Present:—H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge (president), the Duke of Somerset, Earl Nelson, Lord Petre, Lord Winmarleigh, Sir Richard Dacres, Sir Anthony Stransham, Sir J. Henry Lefroy, Admiral Hamilton, General Eyre, and John Ball, Esq.; Mr. W. H. Mugford, the secretary, also attended.

A Royal Warrant issued on the 1st inst. provides that "the officer appointed as instructor, to take charge of the Military Veterinary School, shall receive, besides the pay of his grade in the Veterinary Department, extra pay at the rate of £150 a year."

Two Brigade Depôts are vacant—the 48th (Guildford), by the promotion of Colonel G. Dean-Pitt, C.B.; and the 11th (Exeter), by the retirement of Colonel F. E. Drewe, on the completion of his five years. The 36th (Taunton) will have to be filled immediately, as Colonel G. N. Boldero stands first on the list of Colonels for promotion, and will be gazetted in the course of a week or so. Colonel F. F. Hamilton, C.B., half-pay, late 4th Foot, will succeed Colonel Drewe, at Exeter.

The following exchanges of stations have been carried out, with the approval of the Horse Guards, viz.:—Brevet Major C. L. Harvey, 71st Foot, from Garrison Instructor at Edinburgh to the Dublin District; Captain J. W. F. Buxton, from Garrison Instructor at Dublin to the York District; and Brevet Major F. Cochran, 37th Foot, from Garrison Instructor at York to Edinburgh.

We are glad to learn that Major-General Burnaby vindicated his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge during the "General Officers" debate in the House. None of the papers give General Burnaby's speech, but we believe the following is what he said:—"The Member for Glasgow is quite wrong in saying his Royal Highness is prejudiced by belonging to the old school. There is no man who has better encountered and adopted all those rational and well-considered reforms which the lapse of years and altered circumstances have necessitated, than his Royal Highness, and no man with a quicker appreciation of the exigencies of the times within which he lives." In this view most unprejudiced persons will fully coincide.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord G. Scott, is having her foremast backstays removed further aft, her boats' davits heightened, capstan repaired, and other alterations in her fittings made at Portsmouth. She is to be ready for sea by the 14th inst., or a fortnight after the time originally fixed. Nothing is definitely known as to the cruise which she is about to undertake.

Belleisle, Capt. Barnardiston, returned to Portland on July 7.

Condor, Com. Edward F. Day, arrived at Malta on July 3, and was to leave with mails for the Fleet towards the latter end of the current week.

Himalaya, Capt. Brent, with Lord and Lady Lytton and family on board, now on her homeward voyage, is expected to reach Aden on the 14th inst., and to leave on the 17th. She will proceed thence to Suez, Port Said, and Malta, at which places she will probably arrive on the 22nd, 24th, and 28th inst. respectively. She will leave Malta on Aug. 1 for Lisbon, where she is expected to arrive on Aug. 7, and whence she will sail on the 9th for Portsmouth, arriving about the 14th. According to letters received from this ship, it appeared that she has experienced intense heat on her voyage between Port Said and Aden. Hornet, Com. J. S. Eaton, left Aden for England on June 19.

Invincible, Capt. the Hon. Edmund R. Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., has been ordered to Spezia in advance of the squadron.

London, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg. Notice is given that preparations are being made by the Accountant-General of the Navy for the distribution of tonnage-bounty awarded for the slave-dhow Chuai Kunga, captured April 4, 1879, and two other dhows, names unknown, captured April 6 and 9, 1879, by this ship. Due notice will be given of the date proposed for the distribution; and, at the same time, the amount of an individual's share in the respective classes will be announced.

Northampton, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir J. M'Clintock, will leave Halifax about the middle of July to visit St. John's, N.B., returning about Aug. 1.

Northumberland, Capt. Henry R. Wratislaw. A singular question, writes a correspondent to the Globe, has just been brought before the Secretary of State. It appears that on June 24, during the voyage of H.M.S. Northumberland from Bantry to Portland, the boys were sent to the masthead. Robert Sweetland, a native of Chard, in Somerset, was amongst them, and on returning to the deck, missed his footing immediately under the maintop, and fell on board, his head striking upon a gun. Death resulted from a fractured skull. The next day the deceased was buried at sea, only a few miles from the anchorage at Portland. Complaint has been made that, as the ship was so near land, no proper inquiry was held by the coroner as to the cause of death; and also that the relatives had not the opportunity of following the remains to the grave.

Philomel, Com. H. B. Berners, was at Jeddah by the latest advices, and was going to Aden to relieve the Seagull, which vessel was to proceed to the Seychelles for change of air.

Rupert, Capt. Edwin J. Pollard, has been ordered to Genoa.

Seagull. Com. Maxwell Heron, of this ship, has been invalided, and comes home by the mail of June 21 from Aden. This ship is under orders to proceed to the Seychelles on a two months' cruise, having been stationed on the Aden and Red Sea divisions of the East Indian station for over twelve months. She will return to Aden by the end of August.

Vestal, Com. D. G. Tandy, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday from the East Indies, viâ the Suez Canal. The Vestal was recommissioned at Zanzibar on January 1, 1879. She proceeded into Portsmouth Harbour on Wednesday to pay off.

Warrior, Capt. Gordon Douglas, was surveyed last Saturday, when the end of one of her bilge keels was found turned up; the composition was also scraped off a part of her bottom by contact with one of the piles of Portland Breakwater. The defects were made good, and she was undocked at noon on Monday, proceeding at once to Torbay to join the Reserve Squadron, with which she sailed on July 7 for Bantry Bay. The squadron was off the Scillies on Thursday.

Woodlark, Com. T. C. Johnson, arrived at Aden on June 15. The assistant-paymaster of the Woodlark (Mr. Weaver) died suddenly from heat-apoplexy within an hour after her arrival, having only been taken ill that forenoon. The funeral took place at 6 p.m., and was attended by the officers of the ship present, as well as by the military stationed at Steamer Point.

The under-mentioned men have been awarded the medal for long-service and good-conduct:—John Best, ropemaker, of the Achilles; John Bond, gunner's mate, of the Resistance; Thomas Richards, ship's cook, first-class, of the Hercules; James Shave, boatswain's mate, of the Garnet; Richard Rackley, chief boatman, and Job Mason, boatman, of the Coastguard; James W. Howes, quartermaster of the Duke of Wellington; John J. Smith, naval schoolmaster, of the Iron Duke; James Lamerton, leading stoker, of the Modeste; Charles T. Curtis, A.B., rigger of the Osborne (her Majesty's yacht); R. W. Doidge, ship's corporal, first-class, of the Danae; Albert Smith, cook, second-class, of the Flying Fish; James Lee, armourer, of the Modeste; Samuel Turner, gunner R.M.A., of the Blanche; and John Hammerton, private R.M., of her Majesty's yacht Victoria and Albert.

THE ATALANTA INQUIRY.

The Committee appointed to report whether her Majesty's ship Atalanta was sound, stable, and seaworthy when she left England for the West Indies in October, 1879; also, whether her rigging, equipment, officers, and crew were in all respects sufficient and suitable to provide for her safety in the service in which she was employed, assembled on Wednesday in the Sessions House, Westminster. The Committee consisted of Admiral A. P. Ryder (chairman), Vice-Admiral George Granville Randolph, C.B., Mr. H. C. Rothery (Wreck Commissioner), Staff Capt. Robert Barrie Batt, master attendant and Queen's harbourmaster, Chatham; and Mr. Bernard Waymouth, secretary Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping. Mr. George P. Martin, Deputy-Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, officiated as secretary.

Admiral Blake was the first witness examined. In answer to questions put by Admiral Ryder, he said: I had the command of the Atalanta under the name of the Juno. I commissioned her in 1845, and paid her off in 1849. She was employed upon the Pacific station. I never experienced bad weather whilst with her, not even in passing the Horn. In fact I made an extraordinary passage in her. Did you consider that the Juno was a thoroughly sound ship?—I think there never was a better. As to her stability under pressure of wind, would you describe her as a stable or unstable ship?—Uncommonly stable. We never laid to in heavy weather. She always ran well. She rolled deep in the trough of the sea, but she was up again "like a bird." May I sum up what you say by saying that she rolled easy, but quick?—Yes, very quick. She was so buoyant that she would send the spray up into the mainsail like a cutter. Did you consider her a well-built and strong ship?—I do not think that there ever was a better ship built. Did she show any symptoms of weakness?—I never found any, but we were a new ship. I found no defects whatever in her as far as I had reason to remark. By Capt. Batt: I had never any occasion to change her trim. By Admiral Ryder: I do not think that I ever had to find fault with her in any way. By Capt. Batt: As to whether the lower masts were wedged on the upper decks I am not able to say, By Mr. Waymouth: I should say nothing could be more lively or buoyant than the motion of the ship. It was found advisable not to put weights at either end of the ship.

Vice-Admiral Winterton Turnour was the next witness. He said: I was on board the Juno, afterwards called the Atalanta, between 1845 and 1849, on the Pacific station. I was lieutenant on board. I certainly considered her at the time a sound ship, and she never showed any signs of weakness in stress of weather. As to her stability, I considered her a very stiff ship. I don't remember the extreme angle we lurched over to. She rolled easily but quickly in the trough of the sea. I don't remember ever having to lay the ship to. I can't remember that we were taken aback. I can't recollect the amount of ballast in her, but it was a small quantity. By Mr. Rothery: She rolled moderately deep, but came up quickly. She recovered herself rapidly and easily. By Capt. Batt: The ship steered easily. Do you recollect whether the foremast and mainmast were wedged in the upper deck?—My impression is that they were wedged on the upper deck, and on the main deck. Can you tell me the complement of the ship?—240 men. We could have carried 60 or 70 supernumeraries by giving men berths on the main deck. Was it not unusual to wedge the masts?—I should say not, in my time. Admiral Ryder: Did you ever fill up the tanks with salt water?—To my recollection, never.

Rear-Admiral Dorville: I was in the Juno from 1845 to 1847. I was first lieutenant for 18 months. To the best of my recollection we did not experience any heavy weather. I considered her a perfectly sound ship. She was very stiff under canvas. We never filled the empty tanks with salt water. I considered her a perfectly seaworthy ship. I do not remember that she leaked or strained at all. By Mr. Rothery: I did not consider that she rolled heavily. Capt. Batt: Did you ever consider that she was overmasted?—No. Had she skid gratings and ladders on the upper deck?—Yes. I do not think the fore and main masts were wedged on the upper deck. The complement of the ship was about 240 or 250, and we could have accommodated more, as she was a roomy ship. Mr. Waymouth: Do you recollect on one occasion that she put her lee netting into the water?—I do not remember, but I daresay she did, as it is customary to do it in a gale of wind.

Staff Commander Jones: I served in the Juno from 1845 to 1848. I was master. I do not recollect any particularly bad weather. She would roll quick, but easy. Did you consider her a thoroughly sound ship?—Yes, I did, and I considered her a stiff ship. I cannot remember the greatest angle she lurched to, but it might have been 40 deg. I considered her a thoroughly seaworthy man-of-war. I do not know any better. By Mr. Rothery: She yielded to a certain point quickly, but beyond that there was a difficulty in getting her down. By Capt. Batt: I do not remember that her rigging was ever crippled after a breeze of wind. Her fore and main masts were wedged on all three decks. By Mr. Waymouth: I do not recollect any spar ever being carried away. I do not recollect any ship being without wedging on the upper deck.

Commander Key said: I served in the Juno between the years 1853 and 1857. In my opinion she was a thoroughly sound ship. I considered her a stiff ship. In heavy gales and a heavy sea she would give comparatively heavy lee lurches. She was decidedly an easy ship, being a short vessel. Were the empty barrels ever filled up with salt-water?—I believe they always were. Do you remember her scudding in a heavy gale?—Once, on the north shore of New Zealand. She behaved in a most admirable manner. She did not broach-to. The wind was on the quarter, or right aft. A heavy gale sprang up, and the ship was put before the wind. She behaved in an admirable manner. Have you ever seen her taken aback in a heavy squall?—I have, but not on a very striking occasion. Would you describe her as a thoroughly seaworthy ship?—Yes. Have you any criticism to make to her discredit ?—I have not. By Admiral Randolph: He never remembered the Juno making water in the hold so that it had to be pumped out. Mr. Rothery: You say she was quick in her movements ?—Comparatively quick. She came up quickly. I should say she was a stiff, stable vessel. Capt. Batt: Had you to top her quarter-boats up ?—Yes. Do you recollect her shipping any seas ?—I should say we were exempt, as compared with other vessels. I never remember the ship being battened down. I should call her a comfortable ship, almost the beau idéal of such a vessel.

Capt. Bradshaw, who was the next witness, said: He joined the ship in Dec., 1853, and was with her till she was paid off in Sept., 1857, and was 2nd lieut. What station were you on ?—The Australian station. Had you bad weather ?—A great deal. Did you consider the Juno a sound ship ?—I considered her a sound, safe ship. I considered her a stiff ship. Her ballast, as far as I can recollect, was about 35 tons in all. She was lively, and quick in her motion. She did not strain her decks. Were your masts wedged in the upper deck ?—No. Did you ever lose a man overboard ?—Yes. Was that from the lurch of the ship ?—No; he was washed off the spanker boom. I did not consider her at all overmasted. By Capt. Batt: I do not recollect whether the tanks were stowed in two tiers. I never saw salt water put into the tanks. Had you to top up her quarter-boats ?—I only remember that once. We never lost a boat. Had you to lie-to in bad weather ?—Yes; on our return from Pitcairn Island and Australia. We lay under storm-sails only. She was like a cork. She did not ship water. We never battened down. The main-deck ports were closed. I had nothing to apprehend if the ship were taken aback. I felt as safe in that ship as sitting in a room ashore. The complement amounted to 240, men, boys, and officers. The men were not cramped in their accommodation. She could have taken supernumeraries on board. For a lengthened voyage, she might have taken from 30 to 40 extra. What was the idea among seamen as to such vessels ?—I believe they were considered the safest vessels in the Navy. The character of the ships was generally liked. The men used to flock to them. By Mr. Waymouth: She was very lively, but she never "hung." I remember the ship being wet, but she was safe. I remember when she went from the Cape to Zanzibar and the Mozambique Channel, and was subject to the influence of the monsoon. We left England in February, and this was July. We filled up with provisions at the Cape, so that she was not lightened up. We left the Cape in June, and I should say that this was from 30 to 40 days afterwards. Was she not lightened up by the consumption of food and water ?—I do not think she was more than 3 in. lighter than when she had her full complement of provisions. I do not think that it would make much difference in her liveliness. Would the lightening improve her as a sea-going ship ?—I do not think it would make much difference. It appears to me that if you get rid of 40 or 50 tons weight it must make some difference ?—Whatever weight came out of her hold did not make much difference. Would it not be an awkward kind of ship in which to leave young seamen to take in or make sail ?—I do not think so as young boys are brought up in these days. They are able-bodied young seamen, perhaps superior in physique to the men we had in those days. I do not think that the seamen in her were so inexperienced. If there was a heavy sea on she would roll a good deal. She was not what you would call an easy ship as compared with ships built in the present day, but as far as safety goes, I should say that she was about the safest ship in the world. We never shipped a heavy sea whilst I was in her. The Calypso was a similar ship, and I should like to mention that on one occasion when she was hove down with everything cleared out, at 75° her block straps were carried away, and she flew up, sending a wave across to the opposite side of the harbour. We got her down to 78°, and we found that the hardest heave to get her down was in the last few degrees. I do not believe she had arrived at her greatest stability when we got her down. We got her down to 40° easily, and then the difficulty arose. Capt. Batt: What strain was there on your purchase-blocks when they were carried away ?—I could not say. Mr. Waymouth: Do you think that the brigs on the West Coast of Africa were favoured by the young men owing to the prize-money ?—I do not think so, because the prize-money in those days was not very great. I have no doubt some might have risked a little more for the sake of the money. The Calypso was a size smaller than the Juno, but of the same build. I have had experience of other ships of the same class designed by Sir William Symons.

The Court then adjourned.

On Thursday the inquiry was resumed.

Capt. Helby said he was in the Juno as first lieut. from the end of 1853 to the beginning of 1855. She was a perfectly sound ship. He could not remember any exceptionally bad weather. He did not remember any heavy lurch. They occasionally topped the boats. He did not remember being taken aback in a squall. In his time the Juno was under the command of Capt. Freemantle, since deceased. She rolled heavily, but quickly. She was easier with weight on board; that was his impression. She did not roll to windward with sail to steady her. He did not remember battening down, or that she ever had sternway from bad weather. The men were messed and berthed comfortably. She could not have berthed more comfortably. As a Symondite she was easy, having the usual characteristics of those vessels. She was a little inclined to pitch. To reef her mainsail it would take, perhaps, 12 or 14 men. The sails might hang for a time if not properly spilled. She did not show any signs of weakness. If the masts were not wedged on the upper deck he should have remembered the circumstance.

Capt. H. B. Burnaby was in the Juno from June, 1855, to Dec., 1857, as first lieut. for the whole period. He thought her an extremely sound little ship. They had some heavy weather near New Zealand. She rolled heavily at the time. She scudded with the wind on the quarter, and rolled heavily each way. They did not swift in the rigging. The masts were wedged on the upper deck. She never showed any signs of straining. She rolled heavily, but quickly, like all Symondites, but less than other Symondites he had been in. She had about forty tons of ballast. The officers did not make any suggestion to check rolling. She did not roll like the old Albion. Her rolling heavily was not spoken of. They never battened down. It was a rare occurrence to cover skid gratings and skid ladders. She behaved as he would wish any ship to behave. She was not overmasted. He did not recollect that sea-water was put into the tanks, and thought not, from the fact that the ship stood well under canvas. She could have berthed supernumeraries on the upper deck. She rolled 30 degrees to the leeward, as any ship would in any heavy weather. She had generally a dry forecastle. Off Tahiti the foreyard was sprung, it was supposed, in a storm, but it was discovered in a calm. She was not very weathery; but the captain did not go in for sailing. There was no perceptible difference after she had been out for some time and provisions were diminished. He should not think the wedging of the masts on the upper deck would produce any strain. There would be smaller wedges on the upper than on the main deck. He was almost sure the main deck was wedged. She did not leak at any time, but was a very tight ship.

Staff Com. E. W. Creak was in the Juno from 1853 to 1857 as master's assistant and second master. She was a thoroughly sound and exceedingly stable ship. In bad weather she lurched about 30 degrees and rolled to windward, but not heavily. He should scarcely adopt the official record that she rolled 30 to leeward and 20 to windward, making 50 in all. They did not fill the tanks with sea-water; it was the pride of the captain to show them empty and clean. When rolling she came up very quickly—was picked up, as it were. This description of the rolling applied rather when the wind and sea were on the quarter. Her behaviour in bad weather was everything to be desired. Her quick motion did not tear anything aloft. There was no unusual amount of chafing. They had no accident to the masts, which were tried exceedingly. The ballast was all stowed amidships; there was plenty of space for more without interfering with the platform. He should not have recommended any more ballast. There was no need for more than ordinary precaution as to the headgear. She steered remarkably well on all occasions. He did not remember to have heard an expression of fear on the part of any man on board. There was no instrument on board to determine the roll except a pendulum. The masts were wedged on all decks.

Mr. Henry Thomas was boatswain of the Juno from 1853 to 1857. He had seen her rolling heavily; she was over, but in an instant; many a time he had to catch his foot to save himself. She did not strain or chafe excessively. Only once did she ship water on the upper deck. She then rolled from 29 to 30. A little sea came up the lee gangway. She lurched quickly, but men could run aloft at any time. He did not remember any wedges on the upper deck. They left England with twelve months' stores. The ship could conveniently stow all away. They had not to be more careful of the bowsprit gear than in other ships. When she rolled most the lower rigging did not slack; there was no thought of swifting it. The witness was examined at considerable length with regard to the sufficiency of the rigging, as the Atalanta had been rigged from his warrant. In all, he thought the rigging quite sufficient for the security of the masts. There were the same shrouds on the foremast as on the mainmast. There were two pairs of backstays, one abreast and one aft. The ship did not damage her rigging much. From the rolling of the ship there was not a great deal of wear and tear. What was provided for the security of the masts was quite sufficient, and he should therefore say the Atalanta was well rigged. The quarter-boats could be topped easily in bad weather. The boats were not damaged by the ship's rolling. Seamen never hesitated to go aloft. The ship would roll from 29 to 30 to leeward, fly up quick, and go to windward, not so much, perhaps about 20. All this class of vessels acted alike in fine weather and in heavy weather. They were very quick in motion, but a child might steer them.

Mr. John Pratt, now an extra man in the Customs, was captain of the forecastle in the Juno from 1853 to 1857. Her behaviour in bad weather was very good; she was very quick in motion, especially when lightened. She did not ship water. He had been in other ships which chafed a great deal more than the Juno. The boats were not topped-up frequently. The seamen never hesitated to go aloft. It was more safe to go aloft than in some other ships. The Comus, for instance, was much more lively. The anchors did not work owing to the rolling; they were too well secured. She was a good vessel compared with her class. He shipped from the shore knowing what she was. The class was a favourite one with seamen.

The Court then adjourned till Wednesday next, when evidence will be given relating to the later history of the vessel and the changes made to adapt her to the purposes of a training ship.

Sir,—I was, unfortunately, prevented from attending at the Royal United Service Institution on Friday, when Mr. Laughton delivered his interesting lecture on "Naval Promotion, Arithmetically and Historically Considered." I have, however, been favoured with a copy of it, and I venture to appeal to your courtesy to be allowed to make a few observations upon it. With the first portion of the lecture, dealing with the historical question, I do not concern myself. I need only say that, like all Mr. Laughton's historical essays, it is replete with interest and with proofs of the wide historical knowledge on which it is based. If you permit me, I would prefer to remark upon the suggestions put forward in the lecture as to the entry and training of young Naval officers. On many points I fully agree with Mr. Laughton; indeed, I do on all, except those which I shall specify. I go with him fully when he points out "the necessity of doing away with the entry of children as naval cadets." And when he desires to "recur to the system of permitting and encouraging officers of the Mercantile Marine to enter, as sub-lieutenants or lieutenants, for temporary service on board her Majesty's ships," he has my very cordial concurrence. But when he states that "young officers, passed into the active service at the age of eighteen, might have their capabilities tested by a real and severe competitive examination, and at the age of two or three and twenty might be subjected to such further examination as was found advisable," I regret that our agreement ceases. My long and intimate friendship with Mr. Laughton has convinced me that no man is less open to the suspicion of being led by the opinions of the doctrinaires, who seem never tired of trying to import into the Navy ideas altogether foreign to its spirit and irreconcilable with its best traditions. And I am prepared to learn that he has not given his adhesion to the introduction of scholastic competitions to discover the fittest men in what is, and I hope may long continue, the least scholastic of the professions. But I know not what other construction to put upon the phrase ~~he uses~~; and my forebodings as to his real meaning are confirmed, when I find him asking if it is impossible "to get together a body of officers of the highest scientific training, and to let it be understood that promotion to the higher ranks is, as a rule, to be made from these only ?" When I find a man of Mr. Laughton's eminence as an authority on naval education and naval history advocating, or, at all events, appearing to advocate, what are, after all, mere book and school-room tests of proficiency, amongst the officers of the Navy, I confess I experience a feeling of dismay. How such tests are to be made to in any way prove the capacity of an officer for commanding men, for organising a crew, or for handling a ship under the difficult but too common circumstances of the Service afloat, I am altogether at a loss to conceive. I freely admit that in a great Service like the British Navy, the officers of which are numbered by thousands, and the conditions of which are almost infinitely varied, there is ample room for—indeed, an urgent need of—men with the qualifications which his question indicates. But I maintain that they should be the exception, not the rule, and that they should form that minority only which, in all large bodies, may be usefully employed in the performance of special and exceptional, though at the same time honourable and necessary duties. It is getting high time to enter a protest against the inordinate claims of that spectre which we have raised within the last few years, and to which we give the name of "Science." The "scientific officer" is one of the most deplorable products of an age whose intellectual appetite is appeased by the perusal of two-and-sixpenny manuals and primers at a shilling a piece To Madame Roland's pathetic objurgation of the statue of Liberty, "Oh, Liberty, how many crimes have been perpetrated in thy name!" we may add, "Oh, Science, how many follies have been committed in thine!" The common opinion that there is no science outside a treatise on physics, or chemistry, or the like, is not only erroneous, it is injurious to the interests of the Service. The sooner our young officers understand that the man who puts a ship about properly, even the midshipman who takes his boat through a surf rightly, performs an operation in the truest sense scientific, the better it will be for us. The present adoration of Science tends to degrade seamanship and the faculty of command to a lower level than that which both should properly occupy. We may grant that there are some "scientific officers;" indeed, it has been my own good-fortune to serve with some, and to become acquainted with others. Their names are too widely known to make it necessary to specify them here, even if it were becoming. As a rule, the man who passes for a "scientific officer" parades his science before sailors, and keeps his seamanship for the company of philosophers. And the attempt to make all our officers "scientific" is but too likely to end in the production of an unhappily excessive number of mere smatterers. What we want in the Navy is a large proportion of officers who are good seamen, and who have a knowledge of their duty in the management of their ships and the leading of their men, which the training of the lecture-room does nothing to foster, and to which, as a rule, it is distinctly antagonistic. The remainder may be comprised of men who, having a natural bent towards scientific study—in the common acceptation of the phrase—have the means given them to follow it, and who will be available for those special occupations which will always be beneficial to the Service, in a Navy so large as our own. The seamanship of the present day is often unduly decried. It is true, the inroads of the Professor and the "Field-Exercise" Instructor on the quarter-deck bring it somewhat into jeopardy. But it has yet continued unimpaired, as is known to all who are conversant with maritime history. The seamanlike capacity of the men who year after year take the huge mail steamers in safety across the ocean, has nothing to fear in a comparison with that of former days; and I doubt, if in the records of what are considered the best days of the Navy, there can be found anything to beat, what I believe to be an almost unique fact in the annals of seamanship, the absolute immunity from disaster, or even serious accident, which has attended a dozen consecutive years of intricate voyaging by the magnificent Indian troop-ships, with their enormous freight of human beings. Surely in these things there is something as deserving of commendation as there is in proficiency in physics, or in the solution of mathematical problems.—I am, &c.,

SIR,—In last week's issue of the Army and Navy Gazette, I noticed a paragraph in which Mr. Childers was recommended to distinguish himself, and achieve immortal fame, by adding to the soldier's meat ration and augmenting the subaltern's pay. The former you seemed to consider an absolute necessity, but, with regard to the latter, you just admitted the element of doubt,—or, at any rate, did not appear to think the necessity so pressing in the case of the subalterns. Amongst the subalterns there are a few whose condition is pitiable in the extreme, and I do not think you could have had them in your mind's eye when you penned the paragraph referred to. I allude to those subalterns promoted from the ranks. I know something of them, and a more deserving body never sought your aid, and I hope you will help them with all the power of your influential paper. It speaks well for them that they have not clamoured for an improvement of their position. They shrink from making their poverty known, and for this forbearance they have been left to suffer; and, unless you will kindly undertake to make known their urgent claims to the favourable consideration of the authorities, I fear there is not much hope for them. To make perfectly clear their abject poverty, let me take the case of one out of many, with a wife and six children, eight persons in all. His total pay (vide Royal Warrant for pay and promotion, May 1, 1878), is 5s. 3d., and the 1s. for service, 6s. 3d. a day, and this is the whole source of income. Now, divide the 6s. 3d. by eight, and we arrive at the startling result that they have a trifle less than 8d. per diem each for food, clothing, and education, as well as house furniture. Now, I take it, Mr. Editor, that the most economising of Ministers must admit that even the youngest child of an officer can hardly be fed, clothed, and educated (by the way, I noticed that the Duke of Richmond, in the Lords last evening, said that, re the Kirkham Grammar School, any parents who could not afford to pay 1s. 6d. a week for their children should send them to Board schools; where would the children of the poor sub. promoted from the ranks be?) for less than 8d. per diem; and if this be admitted, what must be thought of the adequacy of the parents' share? Just fancy an officer being required to provide food for himself, keep up his expensive uniforms and private clothes, so that he may always, either in or out of uniform, appear dressed as a gentleman, on 8d. per diem! And this is truly the case of many of them. Respectable dress he and his family must have, for they would not long be permitted to be a discredit to the regiment. Into debt he dare not go, or he will be called upon to forfeit his commission, which to him is more than life. What does he do, then, and how does he do it? Well, he starves, or goes as near to it as possible without actually succumbing, bears uncomplainingly the burden that has been heaped upon him by unsympathising hands, and hides his misery under his own roof. I know it be no exaggeration to say he often attends afternoon parades having taken nothing in since a frugal breakfast (except, it may be, a couple of holes or so in his sword-belt), and often no prospect of anything further for the day, for 8d. a day won't go very far, especially when only a moiety of that is available for food; and yet he contrives to meet his brother-officers with a smiling face and a cheery word of greeting. It's a sight for the Gods, for surely this is a man struggling with adversity with a vengeance. Yet this is a man whom the Queen has delighted to honour. Her Most Gracious Majesty has conferred her commission upon him for long, good, and faithful service, and intended it to be a veritable boon and a reward to him. You see what it really is. Whose fault is it? For some reason or another, best known to the authorities, the pay of a subaltern is not fixed at a self-supporting rate, and those who enter through the ordinary portals must needs have a private income to supplement their pay. The reasons for this may be perfectly just and sufficient, but they cannot be made to apply to those whom her Majesty has raised from a position of competence to the highest position as a reward, and the rate of pay in their case should at least be fixed at such a figure as would ensure their getting their daily bread, for which we all pray, but which for many and many a day they have gone without. The reasons that rule the rate of pay of the subs. who enter in the ordinary way, whatever they may be, cannot, and should not, afford any pretext for making the position of those promoted from the ranks unbearable and intolerable. It may be said, under these circumstances,—Why do they accept commissions at all? Dear Mr. Editor, they must be poor students of human nature who ask the question. There is a feeling in the breasts of most men which leads them to desire to improve their condition in life, and rise in the world. Indeed, they would scarcely be men without it. This feeling is present with the soldier equally with other classes. In civil life it stimulates the man to seek for competence or wealth, but with the man who makes soldiering his profession, his only wealth is honour and position; he regards the position of an officer as the most exalted, he sees the honour conferred upon it, and the great respect and esteem in which it is held by all classes of society. He knows it is within his power to attain this position for himself, and a laudable ambition leads him to strive for this prize, which to him excels all other honours. Under its influence, dangerous and arduous services have been willingly undertaken; toil, hardship, and privations cheerfully borne; its presence, acting as a continual spur, has made him the valuable and worthy non-commissioned officer he has been, and in the end has obtained him the recommendations that have induced her Majesty to confer so signal an honour upon him, (what would he have been without this spark of ambition?) and when the prize is within his grasp, is it to be expected that he will question the value of the honour, the prudence exercised in conferring it, or calmly and collectedly sit down and weigh all the advantages and disadvantages of the position? He would be more than human, if he could; and if too soon he realises his difficulties, the discredit of being unable to support the position should rest not with him, but with those who render it an impossibility. It may be further said the fact of a man's having a wife and large family cannot be taken into account in fixing the rate of pay. I reply it can, and should be in their case, at least. In the first place, the State does not expect all her servants to be celibates, and her Majesty was advised to confer the honour, with a full knowledge of the case, as a reward; and further, it is only on account of their being married they are able to accept the commission at all. If single, they could not exist for a single day, unless they happened to have a private income or received some appointment with extra pay attached, for the compulsory outlay for a single sub. amounts to more than his regimental pay. By the time he takes his breakfast, luncheon, and dinner (without wine, even), pays and clothes his servant, where is his 6s. 3d., saying nothing about subscriptions to various objects? The pay of the subaltern promoted from the ranks (be it remembered they are nearly all middle-aged, married men, with families) is a disgrace to wealthy England. They have won the blue ribbon of their arduous profession; but is this a reason why they should be condemned to a life of exquisite torture, in comparison with which a daily attendance upon the Holy Inquisitors would be a cheerful existence? Is this the meed of success? There are not many of them, Mr. Editor. Mr. Childers stated in the House a few days ago there were 33 from Line and Cavalry and 17 from the Artillery during the last five years, or on an average, 10 each year. Their pay raised to 10s. a day would make their lives easy, would make the commission what it was intended to be, a reward, and would not materially alter the Exchequer balances. Plead for them, plead as you would for an oppressed race, and I am sure their grateful thanks will be your reward. I have not written this with any intention of its being inserted as a letter, but only in the hope of inducing you (by bringing the subject to your notice) to treat the matter editorially. I may mention, out of their scanty pay, the Government directs the deduction of 5d. in the £1 (income-tax) faithfully every month throughout the year, and then when the exemption-papers are sent in, the War-Office Tax Commissioners keep them for months before giving the authority for the refund.—I am, &c.,

ONE WHO TAKES A DEEP INTEREST

SIR,—"Miles Olim," in your impression of the 3rd, takes exception to my use of the word "despair" in writing on June 26, denying that the Purchase officers of the Army are apathetic as to their grievances, as was laid to their charge in your issue of June 19. On consideration, however, I find no more suitable term to describe their situation, though I did not and do not apply it in the sense that "Miles Olim" imputes. I can assure "Miles Olim" that the course he suggests has been tried in vain by more Purchase officers than he imagines; and the belief which obtains among those very qualified to form an opinion worth considering, is to the effect that it is to the Press, and especially to the leading journals, that the Purchase officers can alone look to procure for them the redress which the injustice they are suffering under so loudly calls for. M.P.'s say, when solicited to interest themselves in the matter, that they have not the technical information sufficiently authenticated to take to the House, or that they will be happy to support whatever may be proposed in the way of redress by any one who has made the subject their special study, &c. In fact, the subject is not a popular one, and no one will come forward as a champion yet. The facts are so simple. Purchase of commissions was the custom in the English Army for officers of the cavalry or infantry of the Line. This was abolished without a word of warning. Nothing was substituted in its place to administer promotion by for six years, and during those six years all promotion remained at a standstill, because the Secretary of State for War pledged his word that no officers should be in a worse state under the new régime, and every one waited to see what the panacea would be which the Retirement Warrant promised. When at length this appeared, it was seen that every Purchase officer was not only in a worse position and worse state, but was actually utterly wrecked. Seeing that his every right, present and prospective, was confiscated, while the only attempt at any recognition of his invested money was made consequent on his completing 20 years' service, no matter how many had to be passed under the new régime, every one of which he had to pass serving with non-Purchase whose pay was double the Purchase officers, and whose pensions were pensions for service and service only; while the Purchase officers were only offered about the interest of their invested money, with loss of income, commutable at actually several hundred pounds less than their actual disbursements, with interest even only calculated at 3 per cent. And, finally, to add insult to injury, the new régime has resulted in Purchase captains, who have sunk their money to obtain promotion, being compelled to suffer under the most grievous hardship and injustice of seeing the non-Purchase Ordnance Corps captains promoted to field rank over their heads, though their juniors as captains, the Purchase officers' purchase-money being all this time appropriated by the Government. It is quite incomprehensible how the Government can pretend to justify this treatment of their Purchase officers. The injustice of their acts to them is so great, especially as to their purchase-money,—officers purchase, their commissions under recognised, accepted, well-known customary rules and regulations,—and when Purchase was abolished there was but one way in which that change could be fairly introduced viz., by returning them their money, compensating them for interest lost and time spent, and making their continuing to serve or not entirely a question of option. Yet the actual direct contrary to this has been done. Purchase was abolished in 1871, and for six long years the profoundest secrecy was kept as to the Retirement Warrant's provisions, though officers were promised that the abolition of purchase should place them in no worse positon, and hence no one moved. Had such injustice been inflicted on the Artillery or the Medicos, Woolwich and Netley would soon have made themselves felt, because they can act in unison without combination; the Line cannot. Scattered all over the world, and even in England, they cannot move unitedly without some kind of combination which might be construed into want of discipline. The Army is unpopular in England among civilians, and the public do not interest themselves in its rights or wrongs. No champion will arise; and it is useless trying to make its wrongs known without the aid of the press, and the Press is very apathetic as to all concerning officers. There is a dim sort of idea that they are part of the military necessities in time of war, like field telegraphs, war-balloons, &c., but that except for war purposes they should be left in store in peace-time, just renewed when worn out, like old drum-heads, and the old ones disposed of in the quickest, easiest, and cheapest way. If "Miles Olim" is no longer in the Service, and has time to spare and means at his disposal, and is handy to London, he might do much to aid the cause he evidently leans to by personally interviewing the leading spirits of the Press, and in persuading them to advocate Purchase officers' claims, and by pursuing the same course as to Members of Parliament, if these two powers of the State will listen to him. But there is the rub. I think he will have to adopt the despair theory before he has been long at the game.—I am, &c.,

"Miles Olim" writes:—"Are there no independent Members in either House to take up the cause of these deeply-injured public servants? Both Houses are well supplied with officers, many of whom owe all their honours and emoluments to the exertions of the Army, with which they or their ancestors fought and bled; but with the exception of one or two who are apparently diverted from their purpose by bland speeches, covert threats, or promises from adepts in dissimulation, during the present session not a finger has been raised, not a tongue has moved to denounce acts of audacious spoliation which may be equalled, but cannot be surpassed, by any of those political confiscations which are daily taking place. Let these Gallios rest assured that this quiet acquiescence in systematic injustice will one day bear fruit bitter to their own tongues. It would be easy to name a few in each House whose duty it is, on the lowest ground—namely, that their rank and titles are in a degree due to their oppressed comrades—to demand justice and a hearing for their wrongs; but they are sufficiently indicated by the opinions of their fellows, and by the language of the Clubs and of the Service. Prudence and caution are good qualities, but when tamely submissive to official persuasion they cease to be a virtue. In less than three months brevet promotion is to cease, and while we see the grievances of quartermasters and the intolerable wrongs of the R.A. and R.E. constantly paraded, the Purchase officers are left to be robbed of their money, their rights, and their promotion. Will such men as Lord Strathnairn, Sir Walter Barttelot, Sir H. Havelock-Allen, and others, countenance such injustice?"

SIR,—You will, I trust, in justice to a hard-working profession, allow me to say a few words in reference to the paragraph in your issue of May 1 on "Crammers." It seems to me to confound the innocent with the guilty, and from the shortcomings of a few individuals to draw matter for a sweeping condemnation of a large class. That there have been and are establishments which merit your stringent criticism, I have heard before, and do not doubt But I maintain that they are the exception and not the rule, and that once their real character becomes known, not only to parents, but to the pupils themselves, they are, in no long time, overtaken by well-merited failure. From a personal knowledge of two "crammers'" establishments, and a more indirect knowledge of many others, I can affirm that they are by no means the drunken and ill-regulated pandemoniums which the paragraph in question implies, and that the "crammer" does not think it his whole and only duty to teach those who are willing to learn. For the pupils, I may say that, having joined such establishments with the set purpose and desire of getting into the Army, they are not, as a rule, so devoid of sense as to spend in idleness and dissipation the short time which they generally have to devote to preparation; and for the tutors, that, to put it on the lowest ground, the supply would soon cease to be equal to the demand if they were condemned to live in such moral pig-sties as you describe. It is true that "some conscientious tutors are sadly needed," but—though a tutor's testimony to the conscientiousness of the class may not be held of much worth—I must say that I have known and know members of this abused profession whose extreme conscientiousness and painstaking could not be rivalled by members of any other.—I am, &c.,

A very interesting paper in No. 105 (an extra number) of the "Journal" of the Royal United Service Institution is that on "Hotchkiss's Revolving Guns," by Mr. B. B. Hotchkiss; and additional value is given by the report of the subsequent discussion in which Dr. Gatling, Mr. Nordenfelt, and several Naval officers who have devoted much time to the study of this question, took part, thus proving decidedly a debate by experts.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. RUSSIA AND CHINA.

The late First Lord of the Admiralty was not too soon on Thursday in awakening the present Government to the relative positions of the English and Russian squadrons in the far East, for according to the Globe the following information as to the position of the Russian Pacific Fleet has been received :—"At Vladivostock are stationed the clippers Abrek and Djigit, the four gunboats Morj, Nerpa, Gornosti, and Sobol, and the schooner Toongooz. In Chinese waters are the Minin and the Atlantic cruiser Asia. The corvettes Razboinik and Nazednik are on their way from the Cape to Singapore. The clipper Kreutzer, with a fresh crew, left Aden on the 26th ult., en route to China; on which date the Prince Pojarsky arrived at Singapore, bound for the same destination. Under sailing orders to leave Cronstadt are the cruisers Europe and Russia, with troops and stores, and the clippers Plastoon and Strelok. The Kreml, which came into collision last week with a Danish merchantman, while on her way to China, is to return to Cronstadt from Sveaborg, and have the rent in her hull repaired. The ironclad suffered severely from the collision. The only other vessel under orders for the China Seas is the General Admiral, which, it is believed, will not be finished in time to be sent this year. All the cruisers referred to have been strengthened with beams and trusses to enable them to carry artillery, and the Russia and Europe are weighted down to their utmost capacity with torpedoes. In fact, the factory at Cronstadt has been almost cleared out of these deadly weapons. The intention of the Government to despatch the Peter the Great to the Pacific has been abandoned. The hull of the vessel is so weak that the moment the guns on board are fired, or the action of the screw causes the vessel to throb, the water begins to rush in through the "pores" of the ironclad, and the pumps can hardly keep it down. The newly appointed commander of the Pacific Fleet, Adjutant-General Stepan Stepanovitch Lesovsky, was for many years flag-captain to the celebrated commander of the Black Sea Fleet during the Crimean war, Nakhimof. As Minister of Marine he has derived renown from his strenuous advocacy of the cruiser system of warfare, thanks to which Russia to-day possesses twenty-five cruisers."

SIR,—in a very able article in your last impression which deals with the Marines corps, you mention that the Royal Marine Artillery were simply artillery companies of the Royal Marines up to the year 1862, but as a matter of fact, they were a separate corps from 1803 till 1832, when they were disbanded, with the exception of two companies, which were kept on, dressed and armed, however, as infantry. In 1840, they again donned the artillery uniform, and were gradually increased until in 1862 they numbered 24 companies. This semi-infantry organisation, the same as is, I believe, now recommended to be adopted by the committee, was found in practice to answer so badly, that the Admiralty in the year mentioned formed them into the separate corps that now exists. You state in your article that in nine cases out of ten the Marine Artillery officer simply reports that his men are present at quarters, and leaves the rest of the work to the gunnery officer of the ship; but the fact is, that in nearly every ship which carries an artillery officer, the gunners R.M.A. work their guns under their own officers, and there is a direct order from the Admiralty to that effect. It gives me very great pleasure to hear that all the officers of the Marine Light Infantry are capable of drilling a broadside, and that every non-commissioned officer is capable of performing the duties of a No. 1 at any gun. Of these facts I was not aware, although I have served for many years on board different ships, but if such be the case, it will remove the only doubt that the Admiralty have of the possibility of forming the whole of the Marines into an Artillery corps. Of the value of Marine Infantry to the Navy, no one who knows anything of the subject can be ignorant, and their splendid discipline and great services are matters of history; and every true friend of the corps will echo the concluding words of your most powerful article, viz., "Any reorganisation of the corps resulting in the distribution of the Artillery cannot but be deplored, and there can be no question, if the cost can be met, that the wiser course will be to convert the Light Infantry soldier into a gunner, and then make more practical use of his knowledge than has hitherto been done in the Navy," and the country will look to the Government to see that this be carried into effect.—I am, &c.,

SUBSCRIBER.

Writing in reference to the proposed extension of the Royal Seamen and Marine Orphan Schools and Female Orphan Home at Portsmouth, Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, who is president of the Board of Directors, says:—"We now clothe, board, and instruct 137 orphan girls, and 60 fatherless boys are instructed, clothed, and have a breakfast and dinner daily. The girls remain under instruction until fit for domestic service, and the boys until situations are found for them, or until they obtain admission to Greenwich Hospital School. We still find, however, that many of the orphans of seamen and marines remain on the list of eligible candidates for the institution for months, and even years, or have to be rejected altogether for want of further accommodation in the home, as well as of funds for their support and education. We are now desirous of making arrangements for receiving 50 additional orphan girls. To effect this we propose to extend the present building by adding a wing, the cost of which, when completely furnished, will be about £3,000. We are dependent on voluntary contributions for the promotion of our design, but we hope to be able to collect the sum required within the next year, and we have resolved to make an earnest appeal to the public to aid us by their subscriptions in this interesting and important work. Accounts have been opened for the extension of the orphanage with Messrs. Glyn and Co., Lombard Street; Messrs. Hallett and Co., 7 St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square; Messrs. Woodhead and Co., 44 Charing Cross; and Messrs. Grant, Portsmouth."

PHYSICAL COMPETITION IN THE ARMY.

In the House of Lords on Monday evening, Lord Fortescue called attention to a subject which he has brought forward on several previous occasions. Referring at some length to the report of the Joint Committee of the War Office and the Civil Service Commissioners on supplementing the literary examination for the Army by physical competition, he again strongly urged that this should be done. He declared his object to be that we should obtain the best men "all round" as officers of our Army, and argued that by having the entrance examination a purely literary one we ran the risk of giving a bounty to inferior officers. To his mind the argument that we secured good officers under the present examination had no more weight than the same argument when it was used in support of the Purchase system. Lord Dorchester went so strongly with Lord Fortescue that he thought riding would be a useful acquirement for naval officers. Lord Enfield, for the Civil Service Commissioners, gave a history of the question under discussion, and stated as their conclusion that while they were favourable to a physical competition, and thought there were no paramount difficulties in the way of its introduction, they felt that they ought to take no steps in the matter unless they were adequately supported not only by the authorities at the Horse Guards and the War Office, but by public opinion. Lord Morley contended that a physical competition was both undesirable and impracticable. The Duke of Cambridge repeated the opinion expressed by him last Session that the practical difficulties in the way of a physical competition were so great that recourse ought not to be had to it, when without it we succeeded in securing remarkably fine young fellows for cadets, and there was no physical deterioration in the officers of our Army. Lord Bury also now deprecated any change in the direction proposed, as he did when, as Under-Secretary for War, he took part in the discussion of the subject last year. Lord Hylton thought the objections to the proposal preponderated over its advantages.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF GENERAL OFFICERS.

Mr. Trevelyan called attention in the House of Commons on Tuesday to the higher ranks of the Army, and contrasted our list of Generals with that of the Prussian and Saxon army, contending that in the latter a general when unable to perform the active duties of his profession was compelled to go upon the retired list. The total number of men with the colours in the Prussian and Saxon army was 600,000. For these there were 150 generals on the active list, who cost the country £220,000 a year. The total number of men in the British Army (including India) was 400,000, and to command this peace establishment there were 215 generals, 169 lieutenant-generals, and 242 major-generals, making a total of 620, maintained at a cost to the taxpayers of £784,000 per annum. Of these only 63 were actively employed. The result of this system was that the country was put to enormous expense without any corresponding gain. He argued that with this swollen list of generals we had not a sufficiency of competent generals to do the work of the Army, he condemned the system of helpless seniority into which we had fallen, and urged the necessity of cutting down the list of honorary colonels and establishing a fair and intelligent system of selection. He recommended that 100 generals should be retained to do the work that was to be done, and that the shams should be abolished. He believed that if this were done, the country would soon be able to replace the capital sum that had been sunk in the abolition of Purchase. In conclusion, he moved a resolution that steps should at once be taken to reduce the active list of generals to the point at which it is adequate, and no more than adequate, to the actual requirements of the service of the country. The motion was seconded by Mr. Anderson, who urged the desirability of abolishing the office of Commander-in-Chief, and substituting a board of administration similar to that of the Navy. Colonel Loyd-Lindsay and Sir H. Verney denied that there was any analogy between the German and the English Army, and insisted that the general officers to whom exception was taken were in point of fact officers in the enjoyment of pensions for long services in different parts of the world. Mr. Childers corrected Mr. Trevelyan's estimate of the number of active generals, pointing out that it was not by any means so large as he had represented it to be. At the same time he owned that there were many anomalies in the present arrangement of the pay of general officers that might be removed. He also thought it might be well to consider whether the active list might not be contracted so as to represent a greater proportion of efficient officers, and to apply as regards pay the principle which had already been successfully carried out in the Navy. He hoped the House would accept the assurance that the Government were determined to grapple with the difficulty, and would not force their hands so soon after taking office. Lord E. Cecil, on behalf of the Opposition, promised that whenever the Government brought forward a scheme of economical reform for the Army, it should have their unprejudiced consideration. Mr. Trevelyan having expressed himself satisfied with the statement of Mr. Childers, withdrew his resolution.

The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company have contracted for four more steamers for the Indian and Australian mail service, to be built of steel, of great size and power. These vessels will be of about 4,100 tons register, with engines of 750 horse-power, and will be capable of attaining high speed. The contracts have been given to Messrs. Denny and Co., of Dumbarton; Harland and Wolff, of Belfast; and the Barrow Shipbuilding Company. The Peninsular and Oriental Company have now building eight steamers, aggregating nearly 35,000 tons and 6,000 horse-power.—Times.

Reviews.

Our Sons, and How to Start Them in Life. By Arthur Kerry. (Warne and Co.)—This useful little work is justly entitled "a manual of useful information" respecting places of education for youths, the modes of entrance to the professions, the Civil Service, and commercial employment. The author has had ample opportunities of acquiring a mass of information on all matters connected with the professions, and now wishes to impart the knowledge so acquired to the public. There can be no doubt that a carefully-prepared work of this class, compiled by a competent scholar, must prove of considerable assistance to parents and guardians interested in the well-being of their sons. "What to do with our sons" is, and always has been, a problem most difficult of solution. Nothing is more easy than to commit a grave error in the selection of a profession or calling for a youth, and an error of that description can rarely be retrieved. There are not many instances in which a youth has not altered his mind at least a dozen times between the ages of 15 and 20 as to the profession he wishes to adopt. It is equally true that the parents or guardians of young lads are liable to do the same. In order to remove this perplexity, and afford both pupil and teacher improved facilities in exercising their judgments on this most momentous subject, the author has prepared his manual. He must have grappled with many difficulties in performing this self-imposed task, and is justified in expecting that his labour will be appreciated as it deserves.

Where to Go for Help. Compiled by W. Lovely, R.N.—This valuable little work is a compendium for quick and easy reference by any one requiring assistance when in London and its suburbs. In a condensed form there is given much information, valuable both to residents and to visitors to this vast city; and as it is divided into postal districts, there is no difficulty in quickly seeing where the nearest help is to be obtained. Police, fire-engine, and fire-escape stations, hospitals, courts, benevolent societies, and, as a last resource, workhouses, are all readily found by reference to this small work, which has been compiled from information furnished by the Chief Commissioner of Police and the Chief Officer of the Fire Brigade.

Mr. George Beal, of Western Road, Brighton, has issued a set of "New and Improved School Copies," written by Mr. Frederic Bolus, writing-master, which really deserves notice, as the "copies," instead of hackneyed sentences, like "Too much familiarity breeds contempt," and the like, convey useful information in a way in which it will be very easily mastered and retained.

The German Admiralty has decided that every German man-of-war shall in future carry at least one machine gun, mainly for use against attacking torpedo boats. The particular pattern of machine gun to be adopted has apparently not yet been definitely selected. At least two German establishments have designed and constructed machine guns which have passed successfully through a series of preliminary trials, and which, it is reported, will now be tried in competition with one another and with several foreign pieces, such as the Nordenfelt, Gatling, and Hotchkiss guns, the former of which has now been adopted by the navies of England, Sweden, Greece, Chili and Peru, the Argentine Republic, Russia, and Denmark. The machine guns of German manufacture are some of them Krupp's and others from the Wittner steel foundry. The Krupp weapon is in the form of a revolving cannon, consisting of four barrels 27 in. long, with a calibre of 1 in. The projectile weighs half-a-pound, while the charge consists of 50 grammes, or very nearly 2 oz. of powder, the whole cartridge, including the case, weighing 355 grammes, or 12½ oz., while the total weight of the gun itself is 359 lb. The Wittner naval mitrailleuse has also four barrels, and, like the Krupp revolving cannon, throws a bullet weighing a trifle over 8 oz., whilst the charge consists of 70 grammes, or 2½ ozs. of powder.

The Royal Italian Opera season will terminate on Saturday, July 17, when "La Traviata" will be associated with the last appearance of Madame Adelina Patti. M. Jules Cohen's opera of "Estella" is an Italian version of "Les Bleuets," originally produced at the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, Oct. 23, 1867. The composition is rather too light in character for the house to which it is now transferred, and no hope can be entertained of the opera taking a permanent place in the lyric repertory of this establishment, but it is beautifully put on the stage, and contains some pleasing pieces. Mdme. Patti, who represents the heroine, a Spanish peasant girl, has a pretty waltz melody in the third act, which is the only really effective song in the whole opera. The remainder of the season will be occupied by revivals of "The Huguenots," "I Puritani," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and similarly familiar, but always attractive compositions.

At Her Majesty's, Signor Arrigo Boito's opera of "Mefistofele" was produced on Tuesday evening with remarkable success, a crowded and distinguished audience bestowing enthusiastic applause on the executants and the composer. The impressive rendering of a story always retaining a strong hold of the imagination, and the weird manner in which it is here illustrated delighted the auditory, while singular completeness of detail enabled the latest work of the most distinguished modern Italian composer to be presented to the best advantage. Madame Christine Nilsson, who appears both as Margherita and Helen of Troy, with Madame Trebilli as Martha, Signor Campanini as Faust, and Signor Nanetti as Mephistopheles, executed the vocal music in a brilliant manner, and the choral and instrumental portions were given with an effect which commanded for the lyrical novelty an amount of favour rarely expressed with so much heartiness and unanimity.

The Adelphi has been supplied by Mr. Boucicault with an ingenious comic drama, based upon an old French vaudeville. This adaptation was brought out at Wallack's Theatre, New York, in the autumn of 1876, and the title of "Forbidden Fruit," under which it was first presented to American audiences, is retained for the English revival. A brisk translation of the original Palais Royal farce was produced at the Princess's Theatre in October, 1848, under the appellation of "His First Peccadillo." The three scenes of the farce have been expanded into as many acts, with the help of a few situations taken from more modern Parisian pieces of intrigue. The result is a lively performance, which undoubtedly provokes the merriment of the audience; but the moral lesson taught by the escapade of the couple of married men is not very distinctly pronounced. The cast is well supported by Miss Helen Barry, Miss Bella Pateman, Miss Marie Williams, Mr. J. G. Taylor, and Mr. R. Pateman, Miss Clara Jecks and Mr. H. Proctor supplying besides two clever portraitures of a scrupulously proper barmaid and an excitable German head-waiter.

At the Gaiety, the Palais Royal Company has been supplemented by Madame Chaumont, who has returned with those old songs and monologues in which her peculiar talents are best displayed. Her welcome is as warm as it was two years ago, but her voice, never very powerful, has become much worn in the interval. The vivacity of the actress is, however, unabated, and the admirers of her thoroughly characteristic French style will find no reason for slackening their enthusiasm.

The old mail coach yard in Jockey's Fields, abutting on Gray's Inn, is once more a vacant space, through the destruction, by fire, of the Holborn Theatre, which Mr. Sefton Parry built upon its site. The house was first opened with Mr. Boucicault's drama of "Flying Scud," on October 6, 1866. The theatre was renamed the "Mirror" in April, 1875, and reopened as the Duke's in January, 1876. The idea is entertained of building a large hotel on the ground formerly occupied by the theatre and adjacent buildings.

The Haymarket season will terminate at the end of the present month, the comedy of "School" remaining in the programme till the close of Mr. Bancroft's first six months of management.

With this week has ended the season at the St. James's Theatre, "The Ladies' Battle" and "A Regular Fix" not drawing houses sufficiently good to warrant a prolongation of Messrs. Hare and Kendal's campaign.

The "Moore and Burgess Minstrels" have this week migrated to the Standard Theatre, where they were last seen seven years ago. The St. James's Hall is occupied during their absence by the clever company, from New York, known as the "San Francisco Minstrels."

It has long been a source of surprise that in the church of St. Margaret's, Westminster, close to the Abbey, where lie the remains of Sir Walter Raleigh, there should be no other memorial than a mean, modern tablet, and it has been thought that Americans would gladly take part in providing some worthier monument of the fame of one who founded the earliest colony in Virginia. A window to his memory in the church would cost from £500 to £600. Subscriptions will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. J. T. Lord, 38A Porchester Terrace, Hyde Park, W., and by Canon Farrar, who is rector of St. Margaret's.

In Parliament, on Thursday, Com. Price again asked a question with regard to the decrease of the Coastguard owing to a lack of candidates, which he had in another form asked a few days previously; but Mr. S. Lefevre said he had answered a question almost identical in its terms last Monday, and could give no further answer now without going into minute details. He did not think it was in the interests of the public service that a question affecting the pay of a large body of public servants should be asked so shortly after the amount had been voted by the House. Com. Price thought that he had a right to get a clear and categorical answer on the subject from the Government; but the Speaker said that the question had been already answered.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for purchasing and working a property rich in silver-lead, known as Hony Estate, situate near Liskeard, Cornwall, together with the celebrated Wheal Trelawny Silver-Lead Mine immediately adjoining on the south.

The Hony property comprises the mineral riches of the greatest silver-lead bearing lode in Cornwall, intact from the very surface to a depth already proved of 300 fathoms, extending nearly half-a-mile in length, from the boundaries of the Wheal Trelawny on the south to the celebrated Trewetha on the north.

The Estate was the property of the late Dr. Hony, who had firmly resolved never to sell or let it, notwithstanding the repeated solicitations of capitalists and the most tempting offers.

The offers were made owing to the extraordinary richness of the silver-lead bearing lode in the celebrated Wheal Mary Ann and Trelawny on the south, Trewetha on the north, and the continuance of the lode without variation right through Hony property from boundary to boundary. During the lifetime of Dr. Hony, the Trelawny miners encroached beyond their boundary on the present estate, and extracted some silver-lead ore, for which the Wheal Trelawny Company had to pay a large sum of money by way of compensation.

It is calculated that the quantity of workable Silver-Lead Ore is of the value of

The adjoining mines, Wheal Mary Ann, Wheal Trelawny, and Trewetha, returned silver-lead ore worth over £1,500,000 sterling from the same lode and paid very large dividends to the Shareholders.

THE WHEAL HONY and TRELAWNY

"I have known the ground for thirty years, and worked in the Trelawny Mine, near Hony, about twenty-four years ago; since then was agent in the district under the late Mr. Peter Clymo. It is one of the best (if not the best) pieces of mining ground for Silver-Lead Ore in the county, and cannot in my opinion fail to make a good dividend property."

Captain Willcocks writes:—

Captain Metherell says:—

"The lode may be considered proved to 300 fathoms, so that there is no speculation or risk. I will merely add that I know of no other property with such certainty of success."

Captain Hodge writes:—

"I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that there is not another mining property in the Kingdom with such prospects and such a certainty of immense profit, and having such advantages for economical and speedy development."

Prospectuses, with forms of application for shares, copies of the reports and plans, can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, Solicitor, Bankers, and Auditors.

The Silver-Lead Ore in the Hony Estate alone is valued at One Million Six Hundred Thousand Pounds.

The Estimated Dividends are 43 per cent.

The Trelawny Mine, which is also the property of this Company, has paid in Dividends £98,000.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.— By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS. —More Precious than Gold.—Diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera are, through the summer heat, liable to carry off the young, as the winter's cold destroys the aged. In the most acute cases, where internal medicines cannot be retained, the greatest relief will immediately result from rubbing Holloway's soothing Ointment over the abdomen. The friction should be frequent and brisk, to ensure the penetration of a large portion of the unguent. This Ointment calms the excited peristalic action, and soothes the pain. Both vomiting and griping yield to it; where fruits or vegetables have originated the malady, it is proper to remove all undigested matter from the bowels by a moderate dose of Holloway's Pills before using the Ointment.

WHETHER it may be the influence brought to bear upon Lord Northbrook as ex-President of the Royal Geographical Society, or the jealousies consequent on the failure of a great Departmental effort, we know not, but certain it is that the private expedition for reaching, or attempting to reach, the North Pole, meets with the reverse of sympathy at the Admiralty. As far as the Naval element is concerned, we believe that the First Senior Lord is above any jealous fears that an expedition armed with balloons might manage to accomplish that which Sir George Nares and his splendidly equipped ships, the Alert and Discovery, failed to do. Of the Navy as a whole, too, we believe we may say that they are Englishmen first and Service-men after; and the fact that it is proposed to place this expedition under the leadership of Commander Cheyne would prevent their opposing it, even if they did not actually support it with heartiness. But the Departmental officials at Whitehall will not do the slightest thing to lead to the suspicion that they favour the equipment of another British Expedition. They have, very properly, placed the stores and provisions left behind by the Alert at the disposal of foreign Polar expeditions now in those seas, but they will not even lend a sledge, a cooking-pot, or anything that is theirs, to the Arctic Exhibition now formed at the Alexandra Palace. In their own words, "they decline to co-operate with the Committee in any way which may lead the public to believe that they encourage or countenance the proceedings of the Committee." It is clearly stated by the new Arctic Committee that the proposed expedition is a private one—a fact of which they are rather proud —and surely the simple fact of lending a sledge which was used in the last expedition would not have committed the Admiralty to any support of this private enterprise. But perhaps there is a fear that the ballooning expedition may fail, and if so, it would be unpleasant for the Admiralty to be in any way associated with a couple of failures in the frozen seas in the course of a few years. Private individuals and the Peterhead Museum have come to the rescue; and perhaps it is better for the new British Expedition that it should be entirely free from any obligations whatever to a public department, even if that obligation extended only to the loan of a second-hand sledge.

From time to time we have done our best to call attention to the expenses of officers. Again, we return to the charge, for the subject is one of no little importance, and cannot be kept too prominently before the public and the Government. The Duke of Cambridge has done his best in the matter, and has been energetically seconded by some Generals and commanding officers. To produce a reform, however, the Horse Guards must be supported by public opinion at large, and the large majority of the older regimental officers, instead of, as at present, by only a few Military reformers. That some action is called for, that the Commander-in-Chief should be supported, is obvious to all who are acquainted with the matter, and regard it dispassionately. We have little hesitation in saying that during the last thirty years the quasi-obligatory expenses of officers have increased at least forty per cent. Yet many articles of consumption and use have diminished during the same period to an almost similar extent in price. For instance, wine is infinitely less costly than it was in the ante-Crimean days. The same may be said of tea, sugar, and many other articles of food. Uniform and plain clothes are likewise both cheaper. Besides, Co-operative Stores have, during the last four or five years, enabled the economical payer of cash down to buy goods at a reduction of from ten to twenty per cent. less on the price before charged by tradesmen. Notwithstanding, however, these undeniable facts, officers, in order to live like their fellows and to come up to the ordinary regimental standard, require, as we have said, at least an addition of forty per cent. to the income which sufficed in the days when the Duke of Wellington was Commander-in-Chief. In ordinary Infantry regiments of the Line, a careful youth could manage to get on fairly well with an allowance of £100 a year, and many did with only £80. Nor was the income needed very much higher in what are termed "crack" corps. Even in the Guards, many an officer, if he avoided personal luxury, managed to make both ends meet with an allowance of £120 a year. Now, we do not hesitate to say that, as a rule, in the ordinary Line regiments it is almost impossible to live with an allowance of less than £150 a year; while in some expensive Infantry corps it needs great self-denial—more, indeed, than can fairly be expected from a lad—to get on with less than an allowance of £200 a year. A little more than a quarter of a century ago, an officer of the Guards at Chichester or Winchester could keep his monthly mess bills within £12 without exciting remark. Now, in most regiments of the Line, he is fortunate if he gets off with less than £14. The cost of regimental living, too, in every respect is proportionately higher. Soldier-servants have gradually come to expect much higher wages than were paid at the beginning of the present half-century, and the same with the soldier's wife, who acts as laundress. Then there are all sorts of extras, such as subscriptions to a regimental pack of hounds, sometimes to even a regimental drag, and to cricket, and lawn tennis, and football clubs. Then there are the costly guest-nights, the regimental ball, the tents and refreshments at race meetings or athletic sports, and the numerous tips and presents to the mess or band, which it has become the custom to make. It would be a very economically-conducted regimental ball, indeed, which cost a subaltern less than a month's pay, and we have known the subscriptions as high as £20. In the Guards, we understand, there are so many obligatory subscriptions, that a large proportion of an officer's pay is absorbed by them. Many a man would like to decline contributions of money which he cannot afford to give; but he would, on making a protest at the periodical mess-meetings, find himself almost isolated, and would probably be told that such-and-such expenses were necessary to keep up the reputation of the regiment, and that if he cannot afford to pay, he had better leave the regiment. Why, however, should a man who possesses good military qualities be obliged to abstain from entering the Army, merely because he is unable to live up to an artificially luxurious standard? Naval officers live like gentlemen, yet at an infinitely cheaper rate than their military comrades, and any tendency to extravagance is promptly checked by the captain. Why should not a similar scale be adopted in the Army? Why should a regiment be dependent for its reputation or its popularity on the costliness of its entertainments, the display of plate, and the choice nature of the champagne consumed? Why should every mess be as luxurious as regards newspapers, periodicals, and cuisine as a London club? Why should men with an average total income of, say, £300 a year, many of them having only two-thirds of that amount, live in a style only suitable to men of large fortunes? Why should the son fare more luxuriously than the father and mother? The worst of it is that the prevalent and growing extravagance tends to self-indulgence, which ought to be considered one of the worst of military vices. That there is an alarming amount of extravagance is shown by the constant retirements, owing to impecuniosity and the steady flow of money-lenders' circulars to regiments. The evil, we maintain, is gravely injurious to the public service, for it is certainly most objectionable that the choice of the Authorities should be restricted, many good men prevented from entering the Army, and others forced to quit it, because a few foolish officers have gradually raised the cost of living. We say a few, because, though each successive increase of expense is assented to by all, it is really the work of one or two foolish and either rich and selfish or careless officers who have acquired an ascendancy in the regiment. The evil, too, is contagious, for there is great rivalry among regiments, and if the 150th have established a certain scale, the 151st will not consent to be below it. We do not call on the Authorities to combat this blot on our Military system, for they have made repeated endeavours to remove it, but we exhort the whole body of officers to show more common-sense and proper feeling than they have hitherto evinced, and we earnestly call on the general public to try and stimulate a more healthy feeling.

The Dockyard Expense Accounts, which have just been presented to Parliament, exhibit as strong a contrast to those of previous years as can well be imagined. Hitherto it has been with a feeling akin to horror that we have approached the task of reviewing the shipbuilding accounts of the Admiralty, and after a wearisome search through the 700 pages of bewildering figures, we have laid aside the volume with disgust, at finding that it gave us only what was in fact the raw material out of which the critic himself had to manufacture all the practical stuff which the public required. The return formerly was simply a mass of statistical tables, valuable, perhaps, as forming the premises from which certain conclusions as to the cost of the Navy, and the comparative extravagance or economy of the several yards, might be deduced by an expert, but affording absolutely no assistance to the student in arriving at these deductions. Last year, however, we had occasion to notice the dawn of better things; the return had been reduced in size by the adoption of a better arrangement, and what was of still more importance, the accounts had been prefaced by a report of the Accountant-General of the Navy, which not only explained the purport of the accounts themselves, but afforded a considerable amount of original information. This year the improvement is even more marked, for though the process of clipping and condensing has been continued until the volume is reduced to about one-third of its former proportions, the information it contains has been very greatly augmented. Mr. Hamilton has shown by his Report on the Accounts for 1878-79, that he has obtained a thorough grasp of the work of his department, and it is impossible not to recognise his effort to furnish such statistical facts as may prove of practical service to Members of Parliament, and enable them to take an intelligent interest in the affairs of the Navy, instead of contenting himself with providing the bare debtor and creditor accounts which Parliament demands. The same broad principles upon which the former accounts were based have, we are told, governed the preparation of this volume; and two cardinal points have been kept in view,—first, the establishment of a close and direct connection between the expense accounts of the Dockyards, and the appropriation account of Naval expenditure; and secondly, the treatment of each dockyard as a separate establishment, in order to show the comparative cost of similar operations at different yards. But this year, for the first time, the Accountant-General has gone beyond this, following the lines indicated in his Report on the accounts for 1877-78, and has instituted a detailed comparison of the work actually performed in construction of ships, with that laid down for accomplishment in the programme of shipbuilding works and machinery appended to the Navy Estimates. Thus we learn that while the amount of construction in the Dockyards which was contemplated in the Estimates for 1878-79 was 13,408 tons, only 11,671 tons were completed; and similarly, in contract building, while 4,699 tons were proposed to be added, the result of the year's work showed only 4,542 tons to have been achieved; to this, however, must be added the tonnage of the unarmoured vessels purchased during the year, viz., 1,661 tons, as proposed, and 1,719 tons, the actual addition, showing a net deficiency of work performed during the year of 1,836 tons. From a table showing for ten years the amount of construction proposed and completed, we find that this deficiency, however much it is to be deprecated, is by no means exceptional. In four years only out of the ten was the work proposed actually exceeded, and the deficiency in 1878-79 is less than the deficiency in any of the other five years brought into the comparison. It will be remembered that when Mr. Childers was in office, he laid it down as a maxim that an average of 20,000 tons should be added annually to the Navy, in order to maintain it at its normal strength, and to supply the waste caused by wear and tear. No one, as far as we are aware, who was competent to form an opinion upon the subject, has ever taken the view that this was an exaggerated estimate of the requirements of the Navy; and yet, applying this test to the past ten years, we find that we are actually deficient by no less than 8,682 tons, the total amount added by actual construction during this period being only 191,318 tons, instead of 200,000 tons, the minimum amount required, if we accept Mr. Childers's estimate as correct. Fortunately, however, the Vote of Credit came to our aid in 1878, and this enabled the late Government to add 19,647 tons to the Navy, in the shape of ships purchased. Perhaps we can apply no better test than this to the solution of the question, which gave rise to so much acrimonious debate at the time of the recent General Election, whether the Navy had actually improved or deteriorated during the late Administration. Apart from the additions made by means of the Vote of Credit, there is no doubt that in the matter of construction there had been a falling-off from what Mr. Childers had, without challenge, prescribed as the normal rate of increase; with these additions, the increase was conspicuous, and was more than sufficient to cover the shortcomings of both the last two Administrations. Whether the expenditure incurred was laid out to the best advantage, and whether the tonnage added to the Navy represented the classes of vessels most needed, is a matter which these Accounts, for obvious reasons, cannot enable us to judge. The cost of construction during the year 1878-79 amounted to £1,508,049, and is thus classified:—

For armoured vessels built at H.M.'s yards	372,679
For unarmoured vessels built by contract...	516,973
For unarmoured vessels built at H.M.'s yards	344,242
For steam tugs, yard craft, &c.	15,639
Total	£1,508,049

It is to be observed that the cost of ships built by contract as shown above, includes the sums spent subsequently to their purchase upon the alterations and refit of the vessels bought out of the Vote of Credit. We reserve for another occasion the consideration of those portions of the report which relate to the repair and maintenance of ships, and the expenses incurred in what are technically called the indirect or incidental charges, which embrace the whole cost of maintaining the Dockyards, a subject of which, from an economical point of view, the importance can scarcely be exaggerated.

Captain the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., was awarded the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society, at their half-yearly general court on Tuesday, for his gallantry in February last in saving a seaman from drowning, he having fallen overboard at sea. An account of this act of gallantry has already appeared in these columns.

Captain Ernest Rice has made his first excursion as our Naval Attaché for Europe, and has very wisely been sent to St. Petersburg, as no European fleet is so active as the Russian at this moment. Captain Rice has been received in audience by the Grand Duke Constantine.

The training-ship Newcastle does not appear to have recovered from her reputation for sickliness, for on her arrival this week at Spithead she had more hospital cases to land.

The Royal Naval Volunteer gunboat Tay, recently lent to the Liverpool Brigade, has had the misfortune to come into collision with a steam-tug, and knocked a considerable hole in her. Happily, it let in more daylight than water, and the vessel kept afloat.

There has been rather a strong feeling raised among dockyard workmen by the stoppage of the issue of canvas working suits, and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre has been strictly questioned on the matter. It appears that the first order for the stoppage of this privilege, from motives of economy, was rescinded when another election became necessary at Plymouth, owing to the unseating of Sir Edward Bates. There was a very well-grounded suspicion among the dockyard voters that they had voted the wrong way when they went on the "Liberal" side, and this was pointed out to the Admiralty by the Liberal candidate, Sir George Young. The order was rescinded, but Mr. Shaw-Lefevre says it had nothing to do with the election. It certainly did not save the Liberal candidate from defeat.

We regret to learn that the Commodore on the Cape station has met with a bereavement in the loss of his wife, who has been buried in the cemetery at Simon's Town. Mrs. Richards had for some time been in failing health, but it was hoped that the stay at the Cape might have proved beneficial.

Vice-Admiral De Horsey was never particularly proud of his not having been able, with the Shah and Amethyst, to capture the Huascar, although he had good reason afterwards to be thankful that he did not sink her, or cause a loss of more than one of her crew. But the "Shah's" would never have dreamed that the escape of the Huascar, who failed to do any injury to her Majesty's ships, and showed a wonderful aptitude for getting out of the way of danger, would have been made the origin of the foundation of an "Order of Valour" by the Government of Peru. Yet so it is, and all who served in the Huascar in the brush with the Shah and Amethyst, and took care to get away with a sound skin, have been decorated for their valour!

Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., left Plymouth on Sunday on board the Lively, to join the Warrior at Berehaven, as a guest. Rear-Admiral Hardinge, C.B., also proceeded to join the combined Squadron under the command of Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., and will accompany it on its cruise to Vigo and back.

By an Order in Council, dated June 28, a new rating has been established in the Fleet, namely, that of Lithographer, and it is intended that one of this rate shall be borne in flagships. Such an addition to the office staff will be appreciated, when standing orders and memoranda require to be issued to the ships of a squadron.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Mends and the Committee over which he presided to inquire into the existing regulations for governing the embarkation of troops, &c., have made their report to the Admiralty, having finished their labours with a despatch that does them credit, and might well be copied by some other committee-men. We hear that the Admiralty is quite satisfied that the recommendations made by this Committee should be adopted, and has suggested to the War Office that, with the concurrence of that Department, directions shall be given for the recommendation of the Committee to be embodied in the Transport Regulations.

We are glad to learn that it has been decided to raise funds for the erection of a monument to the memory of the officers and crew lost in the Orpheus, for which purpose subscriptions are invited. With this view the following have formed a committee, viz.:—Sir Henry Barkly, K.C.B., G.C.M.G.; Sir T. Gore-Browne, K.C.M.G., C.B.; Sir Julius Vogel, K.C.M.G.; Captain Walter Stewart, R.N.; Major Aylmer Somerset, Rifle Brigade; Major Francis Bulkeley; Commander Sir W. Wiseman, Bart.; Lieut J. L. Armit, R.M.L.I.; C. G. Brooke-Hunt (midshipman on board the Orpheus); Treasurers, Messre. C. Hopkinson and Sons, Bankers, 3 Regent Street; Hon. Sec., W. G. Francis Hunt, R.N., Naval and Military Club. In another column will be found some futher particulars of this project.

The training-ship St. Vincent is now out of quarantine. For some time the boys have not been allowed beyond their recreation-ground, and all entries have been stopped on account of sickness on board. An inquiry is being made as to the healthiness of her position in Portsmouth Harbour, as it is thought that a neighbouring sewage outfall may have something to do with the sickness on board.

The following are the dates for the Indian troopships being ready for service. The Euphrates is to be ready on the 14th of next month, as she will carry out some troop service, viâ the Cape of Good Hope; the Malabar on September 14, the Jumna on September 18, the Serapis on September 29, and the Crocodile on October 1.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour's squadron's movements have been as follows:—The Rupert and Invincible left Leghorn on the 6th, the former going direct to Genoa, and the latter going to Spezia. On the 8th, the Alexandra, Téméraire, and Thunderer left Leghorn, the Monarch from Malta joining the flag just outside. The Helicon remained at Leghorn, but joined the flag at Genoa on the 10th. The Alexandra, Téméraire, and Monarch arrived on the 11th from Spezia, and the squadron was to remain until today. A court-martial has been held on board the Téméraire for a trial of a lieutenant of the Monarch. On August 10 it is intended to hold a Fleet regatta at Palma. The Cygnet left for Malta on the 13th. Crowds of people continue to visit the Thunderer, and on account of the number of boats, it is almost impossible to get alongside at times. The weather is extremely hot, and going about in the sun is getting out of the question.

A rifle-match was shot between the Royal Marine Artillery and the men of the Excellent on the 12th inst. The contest took place on the Eastney Range, and resulted in a victory to the "Excellents." This is the eleventh match of its kind, but the first in which the Blue-jackets have succeeded in beating their veteran opponents.

By the retirement of Mr. Kelly with the rank of Paymaster-in-Chief, an Assistant-Paymaster with more than fourteen years' seniority in that rank becomes entitled to promotion. Owing to the slackness in promotion, this officer has been detained on the Junior List some six years longer than he ought if his career in the Service is to be considered even a mild success. He is now heavily handicapped with junior time and years, and if their Lordships will not increase the Senior List by the abolition of "charges," or some such method, the least that should be done would be to allow all time to count after eight years in the junior grade.

The announcement we made last week that eighteen commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry would be offered to candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy at the next examination, has been modified by the Admiralty. It has now been decided to place only thirteen of these commissions at the disposal of the Light Infantry, while the remaining five will be devoted to the Royal Marine Artillery.

The new regulations for the advancement of Midshipmen of the Royal Naval Reserve, which we announced as forthcoming on June 26, have now been promulgated. The Order in Council authorising the new rules will be found in another column.

Owing to the delay in providing a relief for the Danae she will have had a commission of more than four years' duration before she is paid off. She was commissioned in September, 1876, and left England finally in March, 1877, and was transferred from the Cape to the Australian station. A relief is now to be provided in the Miranda, which will be commissioned on Thursday next, by Commander the Hon. Edward Dawson. The Danae is a 12-gun corvette and a Captain's command, while the Miranda is a composite sloop of 6 guns, commanded by a Commander; yet this seems to be looked upon as a fair relief by the Admiralty. Is there no corvette available?

As the Board of Admiralty digests the report of the Committee on the Royal Marines, so it becomes more and more inclined to leave well alone. Whatever may be the ultimate fate of the distinct Artillery Division, we are assured that that branch will meet with such gentle treatment that those who have been preparing themselves for a great outcry against the injustice of blending the corps may hold their peace. The fact that five officers are to be entered as Marine Artillery officers shows that the corps is not doomed, for their Lordships would not be so exceedingly foolish as to give a commission in the Artillery branch, if it were expiring. Recruiting has not been stopped, but the standard has been raised, so that men of superior physique may alone be admitted. The number to be borne is to be the exact establishment provided for in the Navy Estimates for the present financial year. Taking it altogether, their Lordships do not see their way to accepting the recommendations of the Committee. That means that the gallant corps has been spared much, for the recommendations of the Committee would not have given satisfaction to the corps as a whole.

The following passed at the last examination for assistant-clerks, and will appear in the next Navy List, namely:—Messrs. W. L. Davy, E. H. Isaacs, E. H. Eldred, F. E. Bennett, E. F. Gipps, G. F. Roe, W. P. Thomas, G. Grant, J. A. Vreys, H. H. Shore, W. F. Horniman, J. Willoughby, E. C. Rotherham, J. Murray, and G. H. D. Sarratt. Poor boys!

A relief has been provided for the Decoy, which was commissioned and left England for the West Coast of Africa in September, 1878, the Foam having received orders to take her place on the station. We believe that it is not unlikely that the Decoy will finish her commission in the Mediterranean, as no vessel of her class wants immediate relief on the North-American command. We would, however, point out that both the Elk and Swallow, on the South-East Coast of America, have completed three years' service.

The coming departure of the Wye for the Brazils and River Plate gives, it seems to us, an opportunity to the Admiralty for recommissioning one or more of the gun-vessels on that station. The Elk and the Swallow have both completed their three years' foreign service, as will the Forward in October, and no vessels are yet told off as their reliefs.

We are pleased to have it in our power to render assistance to that hard-worked and most deserving body of non-commissioned officers, the Orderly-room Clerks, by the insertion of the correspondence which is being addressed to us on the subject of their status and prospects. There is no class of men who better deserve the encouragement which Mr. Childers has it in his power to offer, and we should be glad to see their case considered with that of the Quartermasters of the Army. The cry on all hands is the same just now,—good non-commissioned officers cannot be obtained. How is it to be expected that they will be forthcoming, when men occupying positions of such importance as the regimental Orderly-room Clerks are treated with such marked illiberality and want of consideration? Upon the zeal and ability of the orderly-room clerk the comfort of a regiment greatly depends, and the War Office, in recognising the services of this most meritorious body, would not only be doing an act of justice to the individuals concerned, but would at the same time give proof to the rest of the Army that it desires at all times to do what it can to remove any anomalies which may exist to the detriment of the Service.

Militia and Volunteer commanding officers grumbled considerably when the appointment of adjutant was taken out of their hands. The step, however, was a necessary one, so long as adjutants were selected from captains of the linked-battalions of the sub-district. In several instances lately, adjutants have been appointed from alien regiments. This is causing much discontent amongst Auxiliary Force colonels. They are satisfied so long as their adjutant is taken from the sub-district, but they think that in other cases they ought to have some voice in the matter. It frequently happens that a Line captain would be glad of an adjutancy in his native country. He is personally known to the colonel and officers of the regiment with whom he wishes to serve, and yet the colonel is debarred, by regulation, from hinting in any way to the Horse Guards that he desires him to be appointed. Where no captain of the sub-district is available, we cannot see why a commanding officer should have no voice in the selection. It is of the utmost importance to the efficiency of a regiment that the commanding officer and adjutant work in harmony, and the hard-and-fast rule of forbidding the former to even suggest the name of an officer as his adjutant only tends to the contrary.

Promotion in the Army has now come to such a pass that it demands the serious consideration of the Government. On all sides complaints are being raised, and we scarcely remember a time when the combatant branch of the Service was more unanimous in making its voice heard. As we stated lately, in our answers to correspondents, there is little fear but that the Warrant abolishing brevet promotion in succession to General officers will be suspended until the Purchase captains be promoted. Colonel North has taken the subject in hand, and it will be fully gone into shortly in Parliament. Independently, however, of brevet, regimental promotion will be a matter for grave consideration. The Purchase colonels were allowed to continue in command so long, that the advancement of their immediate juniors in many regiments has become almost hopeless. As we have before advocated, the five years' rule ought to have been made general on the abolition of Purchase, and the colonels affected duly compensated. Then there would have been no necessity for their recent summary dismissal, which has caused much heartburning and discontent. We suggest a plan that would give a considerable amount of regimental promotion, and cost the country nothing. There are a number of lieutenant-colonels (both commanding regiments and holding the substantive rank of major) who are merely waiting on till they complete five years in the rank and become colonels, when they can retire with the honorary rank of major-general. If the rank of colonel, conditional on their retirement, were offered them at once, they would obtain the height of their ambition, and retire into private life with the wished-for handle to their name, thus making way for many deserving officers who otherwise have no chance of advancement. It cannot be to the advantage of the Service to have officers who are simply "holding on" until they can obtain some desired step of honorary rank. In most cases their zeal for their profession has evaporated, and they count the days, anxiously looking forward to the time when they will be released from the irksomeness (as they deem it) of military duty. Should the course we suggest be adopted, it would be very necessary to give but a limited time (say three months) for the lieutenant-colonels in question to avail themselves of the offer, as otherwise many would linger on, perhaps for a couple of years, if it happened their regiments were in pleasant quarters.

The French have been making a great cock-a-doodle-doo over, first, the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille, and, secondly, the distribution of the eagleless flags. The capture of the Bastille is certainly not a thing to be proud of. It would never have succeeded but for the active aid of those disloyal soldiers, the Garde Française, nicknamed by the rest of the Army "Les Canards du Main," on account of their rout at Dettingen. The circumstances attending the capture were also most loathsome, the garrison consisting only of about a hundred men, of whom more than half were made to surrender on promise of quarter. Yet no sooner had they laid down their arms than Major de Lanney, the commandant, and many of his men were basely murdered, and their remains paraded about Paris, with every circumstance of fiendish brutality. The French ought to blush, instead of exult, whenever this anniversary comes round. As to the new colours, none but the most petty and vulgar-minded persons would have thought of discarding so celebrated a symbol of national glory, a symbol surrounded by so many heroic aspirations. We have a great regard for the French, and especially for the French Army, but on this occasion they have exposed themselves to the contempt and disgust of all right-minded persons.

Sir Daniel Lysons has inaugurated his command well. We learn that at the encampment on Ascot Heath, previous to the Windsor review, most admirable practice in outpost work and patrolling was afforded, and that every precaution which would be taken in an enemy's country was adopted. The review which followed was a spectacular success; but there were several matters calculated to grieve old soldiers. In the first place, the regiments were terribly weak, few exceeding 500 of all ranks, and many falling much below that number. In the second place, the marching-past of the Guards and Household Cavalry was also far from being as good as we are accustomed to see it, notwithstanding the excellent ground and the stimulus afforded by the presence of her Majesty. But what better could be expected with the present foolish system of short service? To bring up the regiments which were at Windsor to a war strength, it would be necessary, after eliminating the medically unfit, to add about 600 men to each, and these would be utter strangers. Comment on this fact is unnecessary.

"A Field Officer of Artillery" has addressed to us a long letter on the subject of the range-finder invented by the young German, Hensoldt, late of the 20th Hussars, to which we referred last week. Our correspondent says, "Having had an opportunity of testing the merits of this invention, I can unhesitatingly pronounce it superior in every respect to those now being issued. I was present at some trials carried out last year with this instrument, and its superiority over the other instruments now in use was generally admitted. I confess I am astonished to learn that our War Office has lost sight of Hensoldt and his invention. Your reference to the matter appeared most opportunely, for in the same issue of your paper in which you drew attention to the matter, appeared a summary of the Report of the Commandant of the School of Gunnery, in which Colonel Hastings says:—'There are many complaints of the uncertain results obtained from the range-finders supplied, showing either that they are imperfect, or that the men using them had not been well instructed.' The question of range-finders is one of such great importance in these days of long-range guns and fire-arms, that it is incumbent on the military authorities to obtain the very best instrument of the kind in the field. That they have not got the best now, must be evident to all who had opportunities of seeing the experiments carried out under Major-General Bulwer's observation at Chatham last year; and I hope that the War Office will endeavour to ascertain Hensoldt's whereabouts, and, sinking all personal feeling with regard to the man—who all seem to think has been treated with unbecoming severity—place the Army in possession of his range-finder, which has already been subjected to a practical test, and been found to fulfil all requirements, being cheap, accurate, portable, and easily worked. General Bulwer, whilst in command at Chatham, did all in his power to help Hensoldt, and was highly pleased with his invention, which was also seen by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. Surely, then, there is no excuse for our wasting money on an article which, we have it on the authority of the commandant of the School of Gunnery, has produced unsatisfactory results." We fully agree with our correspondent's remarks. We had not seen Colonel Hastings' report at the time that our paragraph was penned.

As we stated some time ago was probable, Lieutenant W. H. Holbech, 60th Rifles, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General R. G. A. Luard, commanding the Militia Forces in Canada.

Our Paris correspondent sends us the following details of the manœuvres to be carried out during the approaching autumn by the several corps of the French Army. The 5th, 6th, 7th, and 9th are to be exercised in corps manœuvres, while the remaining 14 corps will be exercised only in brigade and divisional manœuvres. Two classes of reservists, those of 1871 and 1873, will be temporarily recalled to the colours to take part in the manœuvres, so that the numerical strength of the several units will be considerably above that of their ordinary peace establishment. The 5th Corps, for instance, will place in the field 813 officers, 22,362 men, 3,202 horses, and 421 waggons; the 6th Corps, 669 officers, 19,887 men, 3,041 horses, and 381 waggons; and the 7th Corps, 720 officers, 22,189 men, 3,048 horses, and 327 waggons. The manœuvres of the 5th Corps will take place from September 13 to the 25th; the general idea of the exercises being that a hostile army has crossed the eastern frontier of France, and has arrived in the neighbourhood of Troyes. The 5th Corps, concentrated on the line Nemours, Montargis, will form the right of an imaginary French army, and will move towards the Yonne, but will ultimately be obliged to fall back behind the Loing. The 6th Corps will manœuvre from September 11 to the 22nd in the district through which MacMahon's army marched in 1870, immediately before it capitulated at Sedan. The general idea of its operations will be that an enemy advancing on Rheims has been obliged to fall back behind the Aisne. The 6th Corps, crossing the river at Vouriers, attacks the hostile rear-guard at Voucq, and forces it back on Carignon, where the enemy concentrates and receives reinforcements. The 7th Corps will attack an imaginary hostile force advancing from Pontarlier upon Dole, to cut the communications between Besançon and Lyons; while the 9th Corps will have no prearranged programme, but will manœuvre in accordance with orders issued from day to day. The 2nd and 5th Divisions of Cavalry will also be assembled about the middle of September, under the command of the General commanding the 4th Army Corps, and will manœuvre against one another between the Meuse and Moselle, the two divisions together placing in the field 479 officers, 6,306 men, 6,585 horses, and 156 waggons.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the advertisement which appears elsewhere of a soldiers' fête and grand military tournament, which is to be held in Charlton Park on Monday next.

Colonel E. T. St. L. MccGwire, half-pay, late of the Royal Scots, has been appointed to the Brigade Depôt at Ashton-under-Lyne, vice Colonel R. B. Chichester, transferred to Guildford.

"Deferred Hope" writes:—"It appears to have been decided that to serve the Queen in the ranks of her Majesty's Army is a disgrace, as those officers who hold commissions from the ranks which can be isolated are ineligible for promotion. I refer principally to quartermasters of regiments, the last hit at whom is to introduce their title into a 'subordidate section' of officers, as opposed to a so-called 'superior section,' care being taken that the latter section has no superiority about it except in pay, and allowances, and rank. Commissary-Gen. Watt, in a letter to your paper, dated July 21, 1877, suggested the formation of a 'superior' and 'inferior' commissary in each regiment, the quartermaster being, of course, the 'inferior;' but where were her Majesty's military advisers, when the Royal Warrant for dividing the officers of the Army into castes was laid before the Queen? Commanding officers have persistently brought the claims of their quartermasters to notice, General officers in command have backed these recommendations, the highest military authorities have acknowledged the demand for redress, but nothing has been done, notwithstanding semi-official excuses that a great deal has been done, for quartermasters of late. In what direction, Sir? Certainly, the men most affected do not know. Members of Parliament have taken the matter up; the Press of the country, alike civil and military, Conservative, Liberal, and Radical, has fought the battle; and Mr. Childers promises Major Nolan and Mr. O'Shaughnessy that, among various questions of difficulty awaiting solution at the War Office, that of the grievances of quartermasters would be considered as the third or fourth in order of settlement. It is something new to get such a candid admission and promise as that, and it stamps Mr. Childers as a straightforward Minister. But I would earnestly beg the right hon. gentleman to insist upon a full redress of the grievances, and not to allow half-measures, or the case to be pigeon-holed by the enemy. The Quartermasters must have, once for all, more pay, a proper regimental rank, increased retiring allowances, and the abolition of all caste brand."

THE WINDSOR REVIEW.

Despite the bad weather, the first turn out of the Aldershot Division, under Sir D. Lysons, was interesting and instructive. The mode in which the troops were disposed and handled presented some novel, or at least unusual, methods of handling, and showed that the new General has not forgotten his cunning as a tactician; and now her Majesty has inaugurated the reign of the new General by a review at Windsor.

The ground appointed for the review lies between the Long Walk and Queen Anne's Ride, and for some days past Prince Christian, the ranger of Windsor Forest, assisted by Mr. Simmons, the deputy-surveyor, and Mr. Bartlett, of the Great Park staff, has been engaged in making arrangements for the accommodation of the troops and the public. Nearly in the centre, and in advance of the line of spectators, was the saluting-point, and here, on the Queen's arrival, the Royal Standard was hoisted, marking the place reserved for her Majesty, the Royal Family, and suite. On either side were enclosures for the Queen's household, the Press, and the Eton students, the remainder of the line being open to all comers, whether in carriages or on foot. About 3.30 the troops, who had encamped on the previous night at Chobham and Ascot, began to arrive at the parade-ground, and proceeded to form in review order. At 5 o'clock, the formation of the corps in two lines was completed. In addition to the Aldershot corps, the 1st and 2nd Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) took part in the review. The following is a detailed account of the troops who appeared on the ground:—

At a quarter-past five o'clock a royal salute of 21 guns, fired by a battery of artillery stationed opposite to the saluting-point, announced that the Queen had left Windsor Castle on her way to the review-ground. Her Majesty, who drove in an open carriage, drawn by four white horses, and preceded by two outriders, was accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Princess of Wales and Princess Christian, and attended by a brilliant staff, amongst whom were the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian, Lord Charles Fitzroy, and Sir Garnet Wolseley. A second carriage contained Princess Beatrice and the Duchess of Connaught, with the sons of the Prince of Wales (Princes Albert Victor and George) in their cadet uniform, and two other equipages followed, containing several ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite. On her Majesty arriving at the saluting-point a few minutes before half-past five, the Royal Standard was hoisted, and arms were presented by a guard of honour of the 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards, under Lieut.-Cols. Eaton and the Hon. R. Carington. The band of the regiment, under Mr. Dan Godfrey, played the National Anthem, immediately after which the inspection of the troops was proceeded with. Her Majesty's carriage having taken up its position by the Royal Standard, the march-past commenced. The way was led by the Royal Horse Artillery and the Household Cavalry. The Prince of Wales, as colonel-in-chief of the Household Cavalry Brigade, rode at the head of the three regiments, and the moment his Royal Highness was recognised he was greeted all along the line with hearty cheering. Having saluted in the ordinary way, his Royal Highness rode up to the Royal carriage, and paid his respects to her Majesty. The Household Cavalry were followed by the 1st Infantry Division. The marching of all the regiments was exceedingly good, the palm being carried off by the Rifles, who, both in steadiness and point of numbers, were deserving of all praise. The Duke of Connaught, as colonel of the Rifle Brigade, rode at the head of the battalion which he so lately commanded, and obtained a very hearty reception. The 2nd Cavalry Brigade, which included the 4th Hussars, 5th Lancers, 11th Hussars, and 7th Dragoon Guards, next passed before the Queen, and made a most brilliant display, the 4th Hussars and 5th Lancers being particularly noticeable. The 2nd Infantry Division now came on, closing with the 1st Batn. of the 60th Rifles, 608 strong, and followed by a troop of the Royal Engineers. The troops returned past the saluting-point in the same order as they had at first advanced. The Royal Horse Artillery and the cavalry cantered past, keeping line with remarkable exactitude. Subsequently the army corps was again formed up, the artillery being in front, the cavalry brigades next, and the infantry in the rear. The field batteries then advanced at a trot, and went through the operations of unlimbering, preparing to fire, and limbering up. The first cavalry brigade then advanced, performing the sword exercise, wheeled round, doing pursuing practice, and passed through the second line, moving round the right of the infantry in rear of the Long Walk. The second cavalry brigade went through the same operations, and followed the first brigade round the right of the infantry. The exercises of the cavalry were witnessed with great interest and satisfaction. Then came the grand concluding scene. The divisional cavalry advanced at a trot, cantered, and charged across in front of the Queen. The Prince of Wales rode at the head of the Household Brigade, leading a magnificent charge, which called forth enthusiastic acclamations from the multitude. The review terminated at twenty minutes to seven o'clock, and her Majesty immediately returned to the Castle, a salute of 21 guns being fired as the Royal cortége moved off the ground.

The following General Order was specially issued from the Horse Guards on Thursday:—"H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has received the Queen's commands to inform Gen. Sir D. Lysons, K.C.B., that the review which took place on the 14th inst., under his orders, in the presence of her Majesty, in Windsor Great Park, has met with her entire satisfaction. The soldier-like appearance of the troops, and the precision with which the several manœuvres were executed, were specially remarked, and his Royal Highness has much pleasure in conveying to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of all arms, the expression of her Majesty's approval.—By command, C. H. Ellice, A.G."

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and attended by Lady Abercromby, visited the camp of the Household Cavalry in Windsor Great Park on Thursday morning. Her Majesty was received by Major-Gen. Sir F. W. J. FitzWygram, commanding the Cavalry Division, Aldershot, and Col. Owen Williams, Royal Horse Guards, in command of the camp. The 2nd Life Guards, under Col. Ewart, and the Royal Horse Guards, under Col. Owen Williams, marched past the Queen, who was pleased to compliment these regiments on their smart appearance, notwithstanding the severe storms of rain to which they were exposed on the previous night.

Sir,—By bringing the power of your influential journal to bear on the following facts, you may be able to bring under the notice of those in power the grievances of a deserving but a much neglected body of men, viz., the domestic stewards, R.N. First, an admiral's, captain's, wardroom, and gun-room steward, 1st class, get the enormous sum of 1s. 7d. per day, the pay and rating of an A.B. old scale and only that after a long experience in the under branches, and cannot by any chance or good conduct get any higher (the only class of men who cannot get a position of petty officer); added to that, he is a non-continuous service man, and very often six months out of a ship, and after taking about 27 years to put in 21 years for pension, if he has a first-class character, he gets about £18 a year, no allowance for stripes, or any other allowance. Second, as to duty, ability, &c. He has always to appear well-dressed, and has to be a fair scholar, to keep wine, stock, and mess books, and generally has charge of several hundred pounds worth of wines, stock, &c. He has to be up and ready to go to market in all weathers and climates at 5.30 in the morning, and rarely gets to bed before the officers' lights are out at 10.30. He has charge of and is responsible for the work of all the servants' cooks, and to do a thousand and one odd jobs incidental to his situation. Of course, it must not be thought for a moment that men of their stamp get only the bare 1s. 7d., for the rest of his pay has to come out of the pockets of a not-too-well-paid body of officers. Take, for instance, a post captain has generally to pay his steward £40, a cook £30, and a servant £12 a year out of his own pocket, ward rooms and gun rooms about the same. Ours is the only Navy where the domestic stewards are petty officers, and in the American Navy they have a good position and good pay, for an admiral's steward gets $62 per month, a captain's steward $45, and so on.—I am, &c., A Domestic Steward.

Admiral Lessofsky and his staff started from St. Petersburg on July 14 for Moscow, whence he will proceed to meet the cruiser Europe, in order to join the Pacific Squadron, of which he is appointed commander.

Attention may be called to an invention of the Rev. N. Cowell Brown, of Sheffield, for saving persons from drowning. The invention was on Thursday night very completely tested in the large tank in the annexe of the Westminster Aquarium. The Rev. Mr. Brown effects his purpose by means of a chemical preparation inserted in the clothing. If the preparation be placed between the lining and the cloth, directly the garment is immersed it becomes inflated, and it is stated, will keep on the surface of the water from 40 to 50 hours. There is no difficulty in fitting the linings into the clothes, and another important advantage of the invention is that the materials are very cheap.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

The twenty-first annual prize-meeting of the National Rifle Association opened on Monday last at Wimbledon, by which time it is estimated that nearly 2,000 Volunteers had gone under canvas. There are no new features introduced into the Camp this year, but we observe that the regimental enclosures are not so numerous as they used to be. The executive committee consists of Earl Stanhope (chairman of council), Lieut.-Cols. Sir H. Wilmot, V.C., Stewart Oxley, Sir H. Fletcher, and Mr. Biddulph. Capt. St. John Mildmay, it need hardly be said, fills as indefatigably as ever his post of secretary; Col. Peel has charge of the Executive; the Statistical Department could not be in better hands than those of Major Thompson; Capt. Galwey, R.E., is at the head of the Engineering Department; the Regular troops are under Col. Manningham Buller, Coldstream Guards; the Volunteers under Col. Phillips, Grenadier Guards; and the hospital is in charge of Surg.-Major Elkington, Grenadier Guards. Much additional interest has been imparted to the proceedings by the presence of the American rifle-team, which is to fire a match against the United Kingdom team next Saturday, the last day of the meeting, when H.R.H. the Princess of Wales has graciously consented to attend and distribute the prizes. We have not the space to give full detailed scores of the competitions which have been in progress this week, but the principal results are appended:—

Inter-University Long-range Match. 15 shots at 800, 900, and 1,000 yards, with any rifle. This is the first year of this as a formal competition, though a scratch match of the same kind was shot last year. Cambridge were the winners, with 676 points, against 561 by Oxford (4 men aside).
